PREFATORY NOTE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THE Lists of the Antiquarian Remains in the Bombay Presidency, Sindh and Berar contained in this volume have been prepared in compliance with the orders of the Government of India (Circular letter No. 34—1883 to 1897 of 12th November 1875). Owing to frequent interruptions they have been for a long time in the press, and are not of equal merit throughout. But in most cases the materials have been supplied by subordinate district officers, always hard-wrought, and but rarely with any very clear ideas what exactly should be entered and what omitted from their returns. These returns were mostly made in tabular form; but to have printed them in this form would have been a work of needless extra expense and bulk. In preparing the Lists from such returns I have had often to deal with most untractable materials. A constantly recurring entry was, "The temple consists of stones placed one upon another." Where two returns for the same place were available, their unsatisfactoriness became most palpable: one described a temple of Mailarlinga as 27½ feet long by 20 wide and the roof supported by 60 pillars; the other made it "85 feet long and 37 wide" with 96 pillars. A temple at Kaginelli is said in one return to be 31 feet by 16 and 11 high, with 20 columns; the other says it is 195 feet by 65 and 24 feet high, with 36 columns. Of a temple at Kalkeri it is said, "the temple is 66 feet long and 49 feet wide. The temple contains 361 stone pillars," the narrator being seemingly unconscious that so many pillars would fill up the whole space and leave no floor area. A temple is described as "about 500 years old," and yet in another place we are told it was built in 1530 A.D. Whatever else is omitted (and the position of the place was very frequently not given) we are generally told, even of temples six hundred years old, what they cost: "This temple" (at Hāngal) cost three lakhs of rupees in building," says the writer, though evidently he knew nothing whatever about it. Fortunately some of the returns were creditable, and personal knowledge and references to the higher officers have supplied many details. The delay in carrying the Lists through the Press has further enabled me to fill up blanks and add to the information contained in the returns.

The inscriptions given from various places are not critically edited, but are simply copied from the returns. Those in the Appendix from Girmār have been to some extent revised through the kindness of Colonel J. W. Watson; the Persian and Arabic series from Ahmadābād and other places in Gujarāt, however, have all been prepared by E. Rehatsek, Esq., from facsimiles made by the Archaeological Survey and forwarded to that scholar.

Some additions will doubtless have to be made to the Lists in the following pages, and some entries probably ought not to have been made; but it is believed they include nearly all that is at present known as deserving of any special notice. Of only a small proportion of these monuments is conservation or restoration desirable and possible; of very many of them an archaeological survey and delineation might be desirable, but even of these only a selection can be made.

The Government of India in a Resolution of the Home Department (Archæology), under date Calcutta, the 26th November 1883, No. 3—168-83, gave the following orders:—

PREFACE TO THE REVISED EDITION.

The orders of Government for the revision of the Lists of Antiquarian Remains in the Bombay Presidency are contained in the Government of Bombay Resolutions No. 31 of the 6th January 1892 and No. 2601 of the 12th July 1894. The circumstances under which the original lists were compiled are stated in Dr. Burgess' Prefatory Note, which is retained. The classes for conservation purposes are also described there, and it is in accordance with these that the indication opposite each entry in the lists is now made.

As epigraphy forms a special and important branch of Archaeology, I have, for the benefit of those more especially interested in this subject, had the word Inscription, wherever it occurs in the text, printed in Old English type so as to catch the eye.

A glossary of terms and proper names is added where explanations are given of all vernacular and other terms occurring in italics in the body of the Lists; and, at the end, all monuments in classes Ia., Ib., IIa. and IIb. are gathered together in classified lists.

In the original lists Dr. Burgess frequently acknowledged, in footnotes, special assistance which he received from various Government officers and other gentlemen. As I have omitted these footnotes in the revised edition, I here record the names mentioned, viz., Messrs. J. F. Fleet, C.I.E., C. P. B. Wiltshire, A. B. Steward, E. C. Ozanne, A. T. Crawford, G. H. Johns, A. F. Woodburn, W. F. Sinclair and J. G. White, of the Bombay Civil Service; Messrs. Little, West, Anding, Martineau, Mahadev Vasudev Barve, C.I.E., and Mathuridas Ampitalil; Colonel J. W. Watson, the Reverend S. Baronian, Rao Sihal Gopalji Sarbhahi Desai and Pandit Bhagwanlal Indrajai, Ph.D.

I.—CENTRAL DIVISION.

I.—POONA ZILLA.

I.—POONA AND HAVELI TALUKAS.

1. Poona.—The principal temples in and about the city of Poona are the following:—

A.—Saiva temples:—Parvati, Pāshān, Vṛiddhēśvara, Bhairava nt Yerandā, Pūchāleshvara or the Care temple at Bhāmbarde, Oṃkāreshvara, Hari-Hareśvara, Amṛteśvara, Nāgeśvara, Sōmeśvara, Rāmeśvara, and Sangameśvarn Mahādeva.

B.—Vaishnava temples:—Bājājī, Narsobā, Khunyā Muralidhara, Vishnu in Gosāviparā, Tulāsbāg Rām, Belbāg Vishnu, and Vīṭhobā at Lakṣipul.

C.—Of Devī:—Bhavānī and Tāmbari Jogēsvarī.

D.—Of Gaṇapati in Kāshā.

III. (1.) Pārvati.—On a hill south-west of Poona at about a distance of a mile, there is a collection of temples, approached by a spacious flight of rough cut-stone steps with a wooden hand-rail on the left side. From the entrance, which is on a level with the second plateau on the hill, to the right, there is another flight of steps leading to the upper plateau, on which is an irregular octagonal enclosure of vaulted, terraced roof buildings. Within this enclosure there is a cut-stone kerbed platform $72' \times 66\frac{1}{2}'$; on this the temple of Pārvati and S'ambhu is built of brick and lime masonry $33\frac{1}{2}' \times 27\frac{1}{2}'$ and $45\frac{1}{2}'$ feet high, having open verandahs on three sides and a spire above, with stucco ornaments, surmounted by five ornamental copper-sheeted domes, with finials plated with gold, the centre one being the higher and larger. At the four corners of this platform are 4 small temples with spires of burnt brick and lime masonry, each $6' \times 6'$ and $16\frac{1}{2}'$ feet high, dedicated to Devī Pārvati, Gaṇapati, Vishnu, and Sūrya Nārāyaṇa, respectively. In front of this, to the east side of the platform, is a fountain and a stone shed for Nandi $7\frac{1}{2}' \times 7\frac{1}{2}'$ and 10 feet high. Opposite and outside the enclosure is an upper-storeyed building called the nagārkhāna. On the plateau is a vādā, or enclosure of plain buildings chiefly occupied by the devotees of the Saṁsthāna.

In rear of the vādā, in a small quadrilateral enclosure measuring $83' \times 53\frac{1}{2}'$, is a temple of Kārtika Svāmī, of cut-stone and burnt brick and lime, with a stucco ornamental pinnacle, surmounted with a dome of the same material and a finial. The measurements of this temple are $11\frac{1}{2}' \times 14\frac{1}{2}'$ and 32 feet high. A jatra is held every year on Kārtika Pūrṇimā in honour of this god. Women are prohibited from worshipping it.

To the south of the temple of Kārtika Svāmī is the temple of Vishnu. The exterior dimensions of this temple are $35\frac{1}{2}' \times 35\frac{1}{2}'$ and $65\frac{1}{2}'$ feet high, on a platform of cut-stone $41\frac{1}{2}' \times 52\frac{1}{2}'$ and 2 feet high. To the south and west side of this temple, is the ruin of an upper-storeyed burnt brick and lime masonry building, called the Dīrānkhāna, said to have been burnt down by lightning in 1815 A.D. These temples were erected by Peśā Bājājī Bājirā, in the year 1759 A.D. The annual Government grant for this Samsthāna is said to be Rs. 19,000.

III. (2.) Pāshān Haveli.—Five miles to the north-west of Poona is a temple of Sōmēśvara Mahādeva, on the bank of a small river called Rāmnaḍī. The temple is in a walled courtyard. The exterior dimensions of the temple are $17' \times 17'$. It is built with a cut-stone facing up to a cornice $9\frac{1}{2}$ feet high; from this the dome commences, which is of burnt brick and plaster; the spire is 20 feet high. Attached to this temple is a mandapa of cut-stone up to the cornice. The exterior measurements are $24' \times 21'$; the cornice is surmounted with corbels, projecting about a foot. The building has a vaulted roof, surmounted with cut-stone parapet and cornice, rather ruinous. About 3 feet from this in front is another mandapa. The plinth is 2 feet high of cut-stone, and $22\frac{1}{2}' \times 21\frac{1}{2}'$. On this is built a brick domed building measuring inside $16' 3" \times 15' 9"$, with four pointed arches, one on each side; the inside height, being 16 feet, is plastered with chunam; the walls and stuccoed coiling are painted with pictures of different deities and anchorites. The vault of this building is surmounted with a parapet having four octagonal minarets, one at each corner, with domes; the outside stucco plaster is highly ornamented, but in a very dilapidated state. In front of this second mandapa is a shed for Nandi, supported on stone pillars, with a vault surmounted with masonry dome. Farther in front at the distance of 8 feet, on a stone platform $28' \times 21' 8"$ there is a temple of Māruti, $6\frac{1}{2}' \times 6'$ of plain cut-stone with cornice. Behind this temple is an unfinished dīpamālā of the form of a frustum of a cone, of stone up to 6 feet, the whole height being 30 feet; the upper 24 feet is of brick and lime; the top is approached by a winding flight of steps inside. On both sides of this column are small temples of Ganapati and Bhairava, of equal size, $8\frac{1}{2}' \times 8\frac{1}{2}'$, of plain cut-stone, surmounted with masonry spires or domes with stucco-plaster ornament. Above this platform, 7 feet high, is the entrance platform approached by steps recessed; this platform is partly paved. The entrance is a flat arched vestibule with horse-shoe form arches. Near the entrance is a dharmasālā of common sun-dried brick and mud consisting of one open hall enclosed on three sides and $28' \times 11\frac{1}{2}'$. In the courtyard is a square unfinished kachcha building, intended for homakūṇḍa now in ruins; the roof is nothing but bare rafters. This temple of Pāshān was built by the mother of Śālā Mahārāja about the year 1726 A.D. The annual Government grant for this Samsthāna is Rs 1,013. The first mandapa is said to have been built by the Daphles, and the second by a Bhata named Chitrāo. These mandapas were built about eighty years ago.

- III. (3.) Vṛiddheśvara.—To the north of the city of Poona near the village of Bhāmburde, on the bank of the river Mulā, is the temple of Vṛiddheśvara, which is approached from the river bank by a flight of steps $25\frac{1}{2}$ feet broad called a ghāt, with circular bastions on both sides of the several landings, leading to an enclosure $70' \times 51'$. The enclosing wall is of stone and brick, pointed outside and plastered inside, with an entrance door from the river side, set in cut-stone framing, the floor of the enclosure is paved with rough stone. The temple is $28' \times 19\frac{1}{2}'$ built of ashlar masonry up to about 12 feet, with vaulted roof and pinnacles of stucco, ornamental and surmounted with domes and finials. In front of this temple is a mandapa, $25\frac{1}{2}' \times 23'$ on a stone plinth; the roof is terraced, supported on heavy posts and post plates, joists and planking; there is a sacred bull placed in this mandapa.

In the same enclosure $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet apart, is another temple dedicated to Siddheśvara, built on a plinth 4 feet high and $38' \times 20'$, the front portion of this temple is of stone and lime masonry, and plastered. The rear portion has a stone superstructure; the roof over the front portion is vaulted, surmounted with low dome and finial, the roof over the rear portion is also vaulted, a cut-stone cornice projecting over corbels, surmounted with a Māruti and Śani, and in one of the two on the other side is the image of Ashtabhujā Devi; the second is vacant. The entrance and the temple is strong and highly finished. In front of the entrance, outside, is a small dharmasālā used by the Hindus for performing ceremonies after the dead bodies have been burnt on the river bank, which is approached by two flights of steps. There is also a small temple of Vishnu, of a very inferior description. Behind it is a small out-stone dīpamāla and a few tombs of various sizes and shapes. This temple is said to have been constructed by one Sivarāma Janārdana Chitrāv, a Bhikshuka in the time of the Peśvās, about 160 years ago. The whole temple has been repaired (1893) by public subscription.

II.

(7.) The temple of Hari-hareśvara is in Sanivār Peth, in a small courtyard, and consists of a shrine and enclosed octagonal vestibule with three horse-shoe-shaped small archways on three sides. The shrine is surmounted with a dome of brick and stucco-plaster, and ornamented like the other temples. The vestibule has a terraced roof. In front is an image of Nandi, on a platform under a canopy supported on four pillars and archways surmounted with small domes, now in ruins. The courtyard is partially paved. In one corner of it is a small upperstoreyed building occupied by a devotee; on the top of the doorway is a small rough stone dīpamāla.

(8.) The temple of Amrītośvara is situated in Sanivār Peth, on the bank of the river Mula, on a high platform in a paved courtyard, the walls of which are of cut-stone below and brick and lime with a round chunam coping neatly finished. The temple consists of a shrine and open vestibule, the latter being supported on three archways of horse-shoe shape and pillars. The body of the temple is of cut-stone; the shrine is vaulted and surmounted with a dome of stucco-plaster ornamented. The platform on which the shrine and vestibule stand is 23 feet by 19 feet and 4 feet high. In front of the vestibule is the image of Nandi under a canopy, supported on four pillars, over a platform of the same height as that of the temple, which is approached by steps on each side, the space between the vestibule and Nandi forming a landing. The entrance to the courtyard is also reached by a flight of steps. On the river side of this temple is another courtyard about 3 feet lower, in which is a temple of Samba nearly of the same size, but less ornamental. To the north of this is a verandah, open in front, in which are marble images of Vishnu and Lakshmi and of Garuda opposite to them. The platform of this courtyard is about 25 feet above the bed of the river, which is approached by a flight of steps and sloping ground. These temples were constructed by Sivarāma Janārdana Chitrāv over a century ago.

III.

(9.) The temple of Nāgesvara consists of a shrine and enclosed room in front, of stone, and dome of stucco-plaster, much out of order. A sabha mandapa in front is chiefly of wood work, 35½' long and 21' 8" broad, with ornamental wooden ceiling and gallery all round. In front is an image of Nandi in the mandapa. At the entrance is an upper storey for a nagārkhāna, and on the walls figures of Rishis, &c., are painted.

III.

(10.) The temple of Somāśvara is situated in Kāpādganjā near Aditvār Peth, in an enclosure partly paved. It consists of a shrine and vestibule, open in front, supported on two stone pillars. The body of the temple is of rough stone, surmounted with a brick and chunam dome; the entrance door frame and shutters of the shrine are covered with ornamental brass sheets. The temple is 19½' x 11'; in front is a sabha mandapa 20' x 25', open, supported on square wooden posts and ornamented plank ceiling with terraced roof. In the mandapa on a small platform of decayed stones is the image of Nandi, with a plain little shrine over it. On both sides of the temple are other shrines, smaller in dimensions, $8' 4" \times 8' 4"$, with small open verandahs in front; in one is the image of Ganapati of common stone and in the other is that of Pārvati. These small shrines are surmounted with domes of brick and stucco plaster, set with different images. In the principal temple is the symbol of Samba, a pindi. In the courtyard are open long buildings used as dharmaśālās, and a fountain. This temple is said to have been constructed by Ganapatrāo Nātū, a Sārkār, in the time of the Peshvās, about a century ago. At the entrance is a nagārkhāna of stone and timber; this is a recent addition. The courtyard has a small garden near the fountain and some trees.

- III. (11.) The temple of Kāmesvara is in Sokrayar Petb, near the Reay Market, and consists of a shrine, on a platform $25' \times 25'$. In front and attached to it is another platform $25' \times 25\frac{1}{2}'$, on which is an enclosed mandapa. The body of the shrine is of brick and lime-plastered, and that of the mandapa is of cut-stone; the walls inside are painted with pictures of Ātishis and gods; the shrine is surmounted with a spire of brick and stucco-plaster ornamented; the latter has a smaller plain dome at the top. In front is another open sabha mandapa on square wooden posts $29\frac{1}{2}' \times 27\frac{1}{2}'$, with a gallery on three sides, approached by a staircase on the outside. In this mandapa, in front, is an image of the sacred bull on a small low platform under a canopy, supported on four pillars, surmounted with cornice and a dome with finial. The courtyard is partly paved; the entrance and portion of front wall is of fine cut-stone with a small doorway. This temple is said to have been constructed by Bhān Sāheb Khāsgivale in the time of the Peshvās, about a century ago. The open sabha mandapa was added about eighteen years ago by Mr. Govind Raghunāth, a contractor. In the courtyard, on one side, is a long open building used by the devotees, and a large well on the other side.

- III. (12.) Sanga mōsvari Mahādēv. — This temple, by its name signifies, is at the confluence of the rivers Mula and Muṭhā to the north-west of Poona, and on the south bank of the Mula-Muṭhā. It is dedicated to Mahādēv, and is approached by a flight of steps or ghāt. The temple consists of a shrine and open verandah on stone pillars. The body of the structure is of stone, and the shrine is surmounted by a double spire of brick and stucco-plaster. Over the entrance door is a high gopura approached by steps inside the structure. The gopura is set with human and animal images, and is much out of repair now. On the left as you enter is a small shrine in which is a large image of Māruti. Behind the temple is a tomb said to be of some member of the Holkar family; the enclosure is a garden containing orange and plantain trees. On the platform of the ghāt abutting upon the temple enclosure, outside, are two open verandahs used as dharmaśālās. The tomb is an excellent specimen of good cut-stone work, and is surmounted with a low stone dome. The temple is said to have been constructed by a tailor, and the ghāt, gopura, and enclosure wall by Harināmgir Gōkari, the former about a century ago, and the latter about fifty years ago. In front of the temple is the image of Nandi on a platform. In the shrine is the image of Aṣṭabhuja Devī of marble. In the vestibule is the image in stone of Ganapati.

- III. (13.) Bālājī. — This temple is situated in the same path opposite to that of Bhavānt on the other side of the road, a little to the east, on a platform $33' 9" \times 32'$, and consists of a shrine and vestibule; the former is $19\frac{1}{2}$ feet square; the superstructure up to the cornice is of cut-stone, the roof is vaulted, surmounted with a śikhara and domes with finials, ornamented with stucco-plaster, and contains images of different deities. This temple is in a malā (garden) with a well. In front is an enclosed maṇḍapa of common materials, very dark inside, and rather ruinous. The entrance to this temple has an upper storey over a stone vestibule called the nagārkhāna, in front of which is a śīṇa dipamālā. This temple is said to have been constructed by one Godādhara Bairāgi about a century ago. The expenses are defrayed by the product of the malā in which it is situated. The temple is said to have been struck with lightning some thirty-five years ago, and received slight damage. Close to and in front of this temple are two dharma-sālas, one on each side; on the other side of the road are three small temples of Gaṇapati, Māruti, and Bhairava.

- I. (14.) Narsobā.—The temple of Narsobā is situated in Peth Sadāsiv Karkolpurā, near Kālerāvār, and consists of a shrine, surmounted with a dome. The body of the temple is of stone; the śikhara is of bricks and stucco-plaster. In front is a sabhit maṇḍapa on wooden posts and post-plates, with wooden cusped arches and tiled roof, wooden plank ceiling, with ornamental cornice. The length of the maṇḍapa is 40 feet, and breadth 23 feet; the temple itself is 17' × 9' × 15' 3", and is within a paved courtyard. To the left is a long hall 51' × 9½' open on the inner side, the rear being enclosed with a wall painted with pictures. This temple is said to have been built by one Nārāyaṇa Vāman Josi, a priest, about a century ago. In the shrine is the marble image of Narsobā.

- II. (15.) Kṛhunyā Muralīdhara.—This temple is in the same street, to the north, within a partly paved courtyard. The entrance to it from the east side is of neat cut-stone, and has an upper storey for a nagārkhāna. The temple consists of a shrine and a vestibule, the latter supported on ornamental stone pillars with three horse-shoe shaped arches. The body of the temple is of stone; the roof is surmounted by polygonal domes of sizes, ornamented, of brick and stucco-plaster. In front of the vestibule is the sabhit maṇḍapa in which is a small shrine on a stone platform with an image of Garuḍa made of marble. In the temple is the image of Viṣṇu also, of marble. The temple is 25' × 23½' and the sabhit maṇḍapa 45½' × 30½'. It is said to have been built by one Dādā Gadre, one of the Peśā's Kārbhāris, about a century ago.

- III. (16.) The temple of Viṣṇu is situated in Gosāvi Purā, Somavār Peth, in a courtyard, and consists of a shrine and vestibule. The vestibule is supported on highly ornamental stone pillars and three horse-shoe arches; the body of the temple, as usual, is of cut-stone; the shrine is vaulted, surmounted with a stucco dome, ornamented and painted. In front of the vestibule is a sabhit maṇḍapa on posts and post-plates; in the courtyard is a small fountain of water, with some trees round it. This temple was constructed by Gosāvi Narpatgir, some forty years ago. The courtyard wall is finished off with ornamented stucco plaster all round. In the court are other buildings; in the shrine is a marble image of Viṣṇu and in the vestibule is an image of Garuḍa. The dome, small and large, are all surmounted with gold gilt finials.

- III. (17.) Tulasibāg Temple.—Tulasibāg is situated in Budhavār Peth in an enclosed yard. These temples are of very long standing, but the principal shrine, dedicated to Rāma has been renewed with additions to its dome and sides. The sabhit maṇḍapa courtyard is very small, and contains two other small shrines dedicated to Vishnu and Mahādeva. In front of the latter is the image of the sacred bull under a small canopy. Besides, there are small temples of Ganapati and Mahādeva. To the left of the shrine is a verandah open in the front. The frame-work of the entrance to the shrine is covered with ornamented sheet brass. In the shrine is the image of Jogesvari; in the vestibule are the images of Nāgobā, Vitthobā, Rakhmān, and Ganapati.

- III. (22.) The temple of G a n a p a t i is situated in Kasha Peth, in a courtyard, and consists of a shrine and enclosed room on a platform 35' x 23'; in front of this is a sabha mandapa 28' x 23', supported on posts and post plates of wood, beautifully carved ceiling, with tiled roof. In front, on a high stone platform, is a small plain enclosed temple in which there is an image of the rat (Undhr). Behind this is a cut-stone dipandā in ruins. At the entrance side of the temple is an upperstoreyed building; the lower storey is open in front; the rear end walls are decorated with pictures; occasionally used as a dining room. Has been lately repaired (1893).

- IIa. 2: Old European tomb.—In and about Poona are some old cemeteries and tombs. Tombs of French officers in native service at Ghorpadi and on the Pārvati Hill road. The graves of the Europeans who fell in the battle of Kirkee on the river bank about 250 yards to the north-west of the College of Science. Old graveyard near St. Paul's Church and another in East Street.

II.—MĀVAL TALUKĀ.

- Ia. 1. Kārle.—The cave temples at Kārle are well known. They are situated high up in a spur of the range of hills running along parallel with, and about two and a half miles north of the railway line. They are about two and a half miles from the Kārle station and five from Lanāuli. They consist of a large chaitya and several vihāras—some of the latter much ruined. The chaitya is, without exception, the largest and finest, as well as the best preserved of its class. In and about the cave there are many inscriptions and fragments of inscriptions. The date of the chaitya cave is placed slightly anterior to the Christian Era.* Outside the cave is a small Hindu temple, but neither it nor its attendants have anything to do with the caves which are Buddhist, and a few years ago a stop was made to their red-landing and using the cave as a dharmaśālā, when iron gates were added to the entrances. - Ia. 2. Bhājā.—The cave temples of Bhājā, 3½ miles south of the Kārle Caves, and about one mile from the Kārle station, are situated in the hill side, a short distance above the village of Bhājā, and are a small series of very early Buddhist caves. There are about eighteen excavations, among which is a quaint old chaitya with sloping pillars. It is one of the most interesting in India, and certainly one of the most important to be found anywhere for the history of cave architecture. These caves are as early or earlier than 200 B.C. A fresh cave was discovered here about fourteen years ago by Mr. Cousens of the Lohagad is a fortress of some antiquity and importance in 1495 Malik Ahmad, the founder of the Nizāmsbāhū dynasty at Ahmadnagar, successfully besieged it, and a century and a half later, during the struggle which ultimately led to the establishment of the Marāṭhā power by Śivaji, Lohagad was not overlooked as a place of strength, in 1613 Śivaji surprised it, but eighteen years later had to surrender it to Aurangzib's Lieutenant, Jaysing,—retaking it, however, in 1670. When the Marāṭhā rule was firmly established its strength and position marked Lohagad out as a suitable place for a Kamavadar's Treasury and kacheri. The hill is the scene of an urus each Pūsha full moon, to the tomb of Sheikh Umar, who is supposed to have been a celebrity on the hill and to have been buried there before Lohagad became a fortress. The long, narrow north west spur of the hill is called "Bichu Kānta" from its supposed resemblance to a scorpion's sting.

IIa 9. Visapur—The fort which crowns an adjoining and higher hill is of larger area than that of Lohagad, but not so strong either artificially or naturally. It is said to have been constructed by Bāliji Viśnūth Peśā. Its entrance gateway is now in ruins, but the walls encircling the hill are in tolerable preservation. On the east there is a well-built tank, and there are other tanks and cisterns on the hill. A small temple of Mahādeva within the fortifications is supported by a devasthāna allowance; this temple is not far from the Peśā's residence, now a ruin.

IIa 10. Rajmachi is a fortress on the crest of the Sahyādri range, a few miles north of the Bhor Ghāt. It is more than once mentioned in Marāṭhā history during the struggles of Śivaji and his successors with the Moghals.

III—KHEO TÁLUKA

III 1. Khed, 23 miles north from Poona. Here the places of interest from an architectural or archaeological point of view are—the tomb and mosque of Dilāwar Khān, an old temple at Tukisādi, and the recently built shrine of Śuddheśvara on the left bank of the Bhūma.

(1) Dilāwar Khān's tomb and mosque are situated on the north of the town just outside the Delhi gate, and are surrounded by a wall enclosing a spacious compound, the greater portion of which is put each year under cultivation. The dargāh is on a raised platform of some height the upper part of which is ornamented all round with a pedicel wreath of sculptured foliage. Within the dargāh, which is domed, are two tombs said to contain the remains of Dilāwar Khān and of his brother, a third brother is said to have been buried at Rahimatpur. The inscription over the entrance of the dargāh shows that it was built in the year of Hijra 1022, i. e. A.D. 1618, or early in Jahāngir's reign. The exterior is quadrangular with a minaret flanking the dome at each corner, the four wells are decorated each with a double row of blank arches three in number, the central arch in the lower and the two side arches in the upper row being minutely cusped. The mosque on the west is a graceful specimen of Muslimia carved stonework. It is small, on no elevated platform, and has a double row of arches.

(2) The temple of Tukāji Dnyot Tukāvādi is a few yards to the east of the Poona and Nāsik road. It is entered on the east through a small porch with wall and pillars on either side which extends into a mandapa containing 12 columns, in rows of three, and guarded by a high parapet wall, surmounted by short pillars. The pillars throughout the building are rude and massive; half-way up they are square and are then chamfered off so as to be octagonal, returning quickly however to their quadrangular form which again becomes eight-sided, the shaft ending in a series of round members, surmounted by a square abacus, which is itself topped by a heavy bracket with four projections: they support a flat stone roof which, receding slightly between each set of four pillars, is relieved somewhat of its flat monotony. The pillars are monolithic as is also the dīpamālā at the entrance. The external roof of the mandapa or nave is flat with a kalasa at each of the four corners, and at the junction with the gābhārā has a small spire. The gābhārā is itself surmounted by an egg-shaped dome, with a rude minaret at each of the four corners. This temple must be some centuries old, but it is impossible to arrive at its age from local inquiry and there is no inscription discoverable.

(3) The temple of Siddhōśvara is picturesquely built among trees on the banks of the Bhīmā, about half a mile to the east of the town of Khéd. On the north-east of the temple is a corridor dharmaśālā of brick and chunam, now somewhat out of repair; it is rectangular, the eastern side consisting of four cusped arches, and the north of seven arches, the middle one of which only is cusped; the roof, which is flat, is ornamented with a pierced cornice. On the north of the temple is a small tank with flights of steps on east, north, and south, the west side being occupied by a corridor supported by 8 pillars and 2 pilasters in its frontage towards the tank. The steps on the north are interrupted by two small shrines facing similar shrines on the south. The temple, which consists of nave, transept, and gābhārā, is entered from the north through a small vestibule, the roof of which is supported by two pillars; a canopied Nandi and several dīpamālās face the entrance. The gābhārā is surmounted by a pyramidal and fluted or ribbed roof, with a dome above, some snake ornaments adorning the ribs on the east and west; there is a smaller dome over either transept and a tiny one over the nave. The projecting entablature of the temple is adorned underneath with ribs terminating in what resembles a drop, and with an occasional figure. There is an inscription over the doorway in Sanskrit, which shows that the temple was built by a Vāni—Trimbhak Mādhava—in the year Viśvāvasu, which, if considered as a year of the 3rd Samvatsara from the present, will make the building about 150 years old, i. e., the age assigned by local tradition. The date, Śaka 1647, is however discoverable in the last four words of the third line of the inscription. At Śivarātri there is a small fatra here.

III.

Besides the three buildings above mentioned there is a temple dedicated to Viṣṇu on the south of Khéd on the bank of the Bhīmā built by Chandurām, a Śikhā, about 50 years ago, to which the neighbourhood resorts in small numbers on Gokula Aṣṭami.

III.

2: Bhima'sankarā, 27 miles north-west from Khéd, is a temple built at the source of the river Bhīmā near the crest of the Ghāts and is within the village limits of Bhauargiri. The temple, which is dedicated to Mahādeva, was built by Nānā Phadanavis on the site of an older one, and his widow built the spire. The entrance portal is elaborately carved. Well-built cisterns near it afford a good water-supply, the whole year round; at a distance from the temple towards the north-west is a small cistern which is pointed out as marking the exact source of the sacred river. At this spot, so Hindu mythology relates, Bhīmaka, king of Ayodhyā, of the Solar line, did (tapascharyā) penance before Mahādeva and implored his pardon on account of having, during a hunting expedition, wounded two deer, into whose bodies the souls of two Rishis had traosmigrated : the god pardoned Bhīmaka and offered to grant him any wish he might mention, and Bhīmaka asked that the sweat of Mahādeva's brow might be coverted into a river for the benefit of himself and of mankind. Mahādeva had just then been engaged in a successful but fatiguing contest with the Rākshosa Tripurāsura, and, wearied out by the conflict, was resting from his labours when Bhīmaka addressed him : from the sweat of Mahādeva's brow was thus produced the river Bhīma. The conjunction of the names Bhīmā and Sankara, the latter being a synonym of Mahādeva, is probably due to this tradition. There is an annual jatra here on Sivaratni (Māgha Vād 14) when as many as 20,000 persons collect together from the neighbouring parts of the Dakhan and Kōṅkon.

III.

3. Bhāmchandra hill, 7 miles west of Chākan within the village limits of Sindē, close to the boundary of Bhāmboli. The hill rises steep from the plain on the south and west, and in the escarped, southern side are the caves in question. After a somewhat arduous climb a cistern is passed on the right; the villagers call it Sītā's bath. A little further on, after rounding a promontory, the principal cave of the series is reached; it is small, faces south-west, and is now dedicated to Bhāmchandra Mahādeva. There is a cistern on the left as one enters. The entrance which is 8 feet in height by 13 feet wide is now built up, leaving a small arched doorway in the centre. The temple is very nearly square, rather more than 14 feet long by 13 feet wide; the height is 7 feet and the roof is flat. Four pillars, two on either side, divide the cave into three compartments, the side compartments being each adorned with two pilasters similar to the pillars, and having each a niche with pillared jambs and canopy. There is a chhatra frame carried in the roof. The pillars are massive and square, but half-way up are chamfered so as to be octagonal. The capitals have massive brackets. This temple has an inner shrine occupied by a linga and an image. The inner is separated from the outer cave by an elaborately sculptured doorway, the opening being 2 feet by 4 feet high; the carvings are chiefly of human figures. There are no Buddhist ornaments about the cave. The rock, of which this hill is composed, is of a soft character and the screen or doorway dividing the two shrines has had to be cemented or mortared by the villagers to keep it in its place. Further on is a cell or rather cavern, and at some little distance, end in the middle of an escarpment, and therefore reached with difficulty is a cave, at the end of which is a winding cavernous road, low and narrow, said to permeate the hill and to be many kos in length. There are one or two inaccessible caves higher up; and beyond, on the west, is also a small cave. The Garava of Bhāmchandra Mahādeva is supported by inām land in Bhāmboli.

III.

4. Alandi, on the Indrāyani, is a small municipal town possessing a population of 1,619 persons and an annual municipal revenue of about Rs. 3,500. This income is chiefly derived from the poll-tax levied on the pilgrims who resort to Jānābhā or Jānābhara's shrine on Kārtika Vādya 11 and following days. There are small jatras on the Vādya Ekādasi of every month, but that of Kārtika witnesses the assembling of a very large concourse at Alandi, as many as 50,000 being the estimated average attendance at the jatra. The town is a Devarthana with a revenue of Rs. 1,080, and the management of the temple is in the hands of six administrators elected by the inhabitants, the election being subject to the confirmation of the Collector, and conferring a life tenure on the elected. The temple of Jānābhara is not picturesquely situated, being surrounded by houses. It is entered through three chief doorways named Chandulāl's, Sindhu's, and the Gāṅkṛād's, the second being the principal and fronting the Bazar. The temple enclosure has an arched corridor running all round, which is now divided into separate compartments used as dwelling houses. The mandapa is large and arched, and built of basalt or trap, and between it and the shrine is an unwallled covered way, the shrine itself consists of a small vestibule and a gābhārā, in the latter of which is Jīnōhā's tomb or "Samādhi," over which in a sitting posture is the image of the Śādhū dressed in red, and behind him are figures of his patron gods Viṭṭabā and Rakhmā, Jīnōśvara being regarded as an incarnation of Viṣṇu, both night and day is the gābhārā kept lighted. The shrine is said to have been built three centuries ago by Ambekar Deśpāndē and the large mandapa by Rāmchandrārāo Senvi, a Divān of Sindhu's, 125 years ago. The west wall and corridor were erected a century and a quarter since at the Peśvā's expence and the balcony or nagārkhaṇḍ over the west gateway was constructed by Ganpatirāi Gukṛid at an outlay of Rs 2,000 some thirty years back, hence the west-entrance bears the name of "Gukṛid." A century and a half ago a descendant of the founder Ambekar Deśpāndē built the east and south wall and corridor, and the balcony over the east entrance being erected by Chandulāl, a Divān of the Nizām, he gave his name to that doorway. The north corridor has been in existence for a century and a quarter, being constructed at the expence of Siodā and Kāśī Dīlhi Vāgholkar. The balcony over the gateway is due to Bīlji Govind, one of Sindhu's followers, seventy five years ago at a cost of Rs 8,000.

Some account of Jīnōśvara will not be out of place here —

This celebrated Śādhū was, with his brothers Nivrati and Sepār and their sister Mukṭāhā, born about six centuries ago in the Nāsik district. His father was a Śrāyās and called Chritanya, and as marriage is forbidden to devotees of that class, Jīnōśvara and his brothers and sister were regarded as illegitimate and outcasts. They, however, being desirous of admission into the caste of their father, left their native place and made a pilgrimage to Paṭhan on the Godāvari, a town held in high veneration among Hindus, to beseech the Brahmans of that place to absolve them from the crime of illegitimacy and to admit them within the pale of the "twice born." The Brahmans of Paṭhan at first strenuously refused to listen to their supplication but were at length convinced by a miracle performed by Jīnōśvara that he and his brethren were not ordinary mortals but were avītaras of Viṣṇu and Śiva, and that therefore no expiatory rites were necessary. The miracle performed was that of endowing a buffalo with speech and causing him to recite the Vedas. Some Brahmans still doubted, and a second miracle becoming necessary, Jīnōśvara took advantage of a Śrāddha festival to call down from heaven "the manes" of the host's ancestors, who duly appeared, did justice to the viands offered them, and then vanished. Jīnōśvara and his brethren now bethought them of proceeding to Ajāndā, and during their journey thither the Veda-speaking buffalo died, they duly performed the Śrāddha ceremonies, and gave him the name of 'Vīṣṇobh'. This occurred at Kākū, a hamlet of Aḍ in the Junnar Tāluka, and to this day his Samādhi there is worshipped by a large number of devotees on Chaitra Sudi 11. Jīnōhā's most notable miracle after arriving at Ajāndā was on the occasion of the Śādhū Chāṅgalevās visit to that town. The latter came riding through the town on a tiger and using a snake for a whip, but Jīnōhā determining not to be outdone, went with his brethren to the wall of the town, and riding on it with them, caused a portion of it to move forward and meet Chāngdova; this wall is still pointed out, and at present surrounds a small temple of Viṭhōla on the river bank.

- III. 5. Cha'kan, 18 miles north from Poona, was a place of some importance so far back as the Bāhmani rule when Malik-al-Tijār in Alāu'd-din the II.'s reign made it his headquarters (circa A.D. 1415) during the seven or eight years that he was engaged in reducing the Konkan and the Western Ghāt regions to the subjection of the Bāhmani Sultān. The fort, which has been dismantled, is nearly square and is strengthened by towers at the four corners: each front too is bastioned; the entrance is from the east and through more than one gateway; the walls are high and the moat at their base deep. There are also the remains of a mud out-work protected by a ditch, which were probably once a portion of the mud fort constructed centuries ago, tradition says, by an Abyssinian polygar and strengthened by Malik-al-Tijār in the middle of the fifteenth century. It sustained a memorable siege in 1662, when Phirangaji Narsala, and a S'irāji's officers, held his own for nearly two months against the Moghal army under Shayishteli Khān, one of Aurangzib's generals.

- III. 6. Cha's-Kama'a, on the Bāhmanī, 6 miles north-west from Khed, with a population of 2,200. In the Peshwā's time it was a place of some importance, especially in the middle of the last century, when Rakhmābāi, the daughter of Bālaji Bajirāv Peshwā and the sister of Bālaji and Raghunāthrao, became the wife of Krishnoraō Mādhav Joshi of Olās, who is said to have perished at the battle of Pānīpat. Rakhmābāi expended a large fortune on the town and constructed a fine ghāt to the river, besides building a notable temple on the west near the river, dedicated to Mahādeva under the name of Somēśvara. The temple is surrounded by a quadrangular enclosure, the exterior walls of which terminate in black petal-shaped battlements and are bastioned at the four corners; the battlements of the south-east bastion bear each a snake ornament. The enclosure contains some goodly trees; its chief entrance is by the east doorway, fronting which, and inside, is a very striking dīpamāla or round stambha of basalt, ending in an elaborately carved capital with a square abacus above; the receptacles for the lights, a few of which bear sculptured figures in alto-relievo on their front, are said to number 350; this dīpamāla is lighted on the full-moon of Kārtika only. Beyond the dīpamāla and facing the temple is a Nandi on a raised platform and under a domed canopy; the latter has below the dome and on each of the four sides a fine cusped arch slightly aged; the Nandi, however, is not worthy of its baldacchino. The temple itself is oblong, consisting of the ordinary mandapa and gābhara, the latter being surmounted by a chunam and brick dome, the sides of which are adorned with niches, figures, and miniature domes so usually the adjuncts of a Dakṣha temple. Three elaborately pierced and small apertures in the wall-veil admit light into the sanctum, while three square-headed doorways permit access into the mandapa, those on the north and south having each a grotesquely carved human head, the kirtimukha, as a stopping-stone. This town is usually styled Chās Kamān to distinguish it from Chās Nārodi in the north of the idulā, Kamān and Nārodi being villages adjoining the two towns of Chās respectively.

IV.—JUNNAR TALUEA.

- I a. 1. Junnar (19° 12'; 73° 56'). There are about 140 caves in some six groups round Junnar, which have been described in the Ind. Ant. Vol. VI. p. 32, and Cave Temples of India. Inscriptions. (Surveyed.)

Among the Muhammadan remains the Jamī Masjid is said to be 500 years old, and there is no doubt that it occupies the site of an old Hindu temple. It is approached through a narrow gateway surmounted by an arch which is flanked by four minārs; the gateway is recent, as the year 1235 (Hijra) is engraved below the arch; the roof of the mosque is flat and wooden, and is supported by 18 stone pillars, these pillars are plainly Hindu,—a fact admitted by the Muslim in charge; the outermost row of pillars, six in number, are assisted in supporting the roof by beautifully carved wooden brackets, which are taken by the goldsmiths of the town as patterns in carving their ornaments; the front is surmounted by six minarets.

The present fort of Sivajī outside the town on the south-east is of Muslim origin. It is accessible on the south side only, where a steep ascent conducts to the entrance gateway, which is massive and flanked by towers, several other gateways, all strongly built and bastioned, are passed through before the first of a triple line of fortifications is entered, and when the fortress proper is gained and the summit of the hill, which is near 1,000 feet above Junnar, reached, the thought can scarcely fail to present itself that nature and art combined have created here one of the most impregnable of mountain strongholds. The present fort was built about A.D. 1445 by Malik al-Tijar, the lieutenant of the Bahmanī king Aliʿd din II, but doubtless additions were frequently made to the fortifications under subsequent rulers. It played a not unimportant part during the earlier Marāṭhā period, and is celebrated as being the birthplace of Sivajī. A memorable night attack was made on it in 1680, near the close of Sivajī's career. The most striking of its remains is a mosque with two flanking minarets, the latter being united by a graceful flying arch. This mosque is built over a rock hewn tank, the water of which outlasts the hot season, as does also that of several of the other reservoirs on the hill. On the summit of the plateau is an idgāh, and the tomb of Adam Sabhedar.

Perhaps the most interesting buildings are those outside the town on the east, and the most ancient of these is a dargāh close to and on the right of the high road as one goes from Junnar to Narayana-giri. It is plainly built and has three entrances, and some of the stones used seem taken from a Hindu temple. North of this dargāh and near the Delhi Vē is an old mosque, said to be of the time of Shīkh Jahan.

About a couple of miles east of Junnar is a garden of some extent called the Āfīz Bagh. More than one solution is given of the name, but perhaps the most plausible is that which makes Āfīz a corruption of Habshī, this garden and its mansion having, tradition states, been in the possession of, if not founded by, an Abyssinian chief. The mansion is a substantial and not inelegant building—three balcony windows on the south side overlook a small tank—these windows are supported by somewhat heavy looking brackets and are arched, the east and west sides have each a bay window, the entrance is on the north, the steps being flanked by bay windows similar in adornment to those on the other three sides, there is an upper storey to the house, the roof of the ground floor is arched, and ornamented with lozenge shaped moulding.

At a little distance west of the garden, and therefore nearer Junnar, is a fine dargāh or gumbaz which is supposed to contain the ashes of the Habshī founder of the Āfīz Bagh. This mausoleum has a domed roof, and within it are two tombs said to be those of the Habshī, his wife, six children, and a servant. There are entrances on the south and east

The south entrance is beautifully carved and pierced; it is flat-headed, with pierced work above, and sculptured jambs, and is contained within an ogee arch; there is no inscription above the lintel. The east is a narrow doorway under a pointed arch. The interior is an octagon, and every other octagonal side is ombasured and arched; the west is covered with texts from the Qurān. The exterior walls form a quadrangular figure; the upper portion of the wall-veil terminates in an artistic cornice of brick and chunam, consisting of pointed arches resting on tiny pedestals and interlacing each other; a small minaret graces each of the four corners of the building. The walls are, as regards ornament, divided into two series of blank and arched windows, the upper consisting of five and the lower of three windows, the middle lower panel on the south and east walls being exchanged for a doorway.

To the west of this large mausoleum is a small dargah, with a pyramidal roof.

- III 2. Behle, 21 miles E.S.E. from Junnar (19° 7'; 74° 15'), contains a fine Hemādpanthi badli. This tank is about 20 yards square, and is entered by two flights of ten steps each on opposite sides; the walls are adorned with 18 canopied niches, of which four ornament each of the sides where the steps are, and five each of the remaining sides. These niches are somewhat under 3 feet high, and are 1½ feet wide by 1 foot deep; they are square-headed with carved jambs, and their finial is a canopy knobbed at the top. There was an inscription on the south wall, but it has been worn away.

- III b. 3. Pur, 10 miles W.N.W. from Junnar:—Temple of Kukadeśvara at the source of the Kukaḍi, a few miles east from the Nānā Ghāt, and attracts an assemblage of from one to two thousand persons on Māgha Vadya 14 (Śivāratri). It is situated within the village limits of Pur, and is supported by a Devasthāna allowance of Rs. 76 per annum. The abrupt mountain fortresses of Chāwand, three miles to the east, and an amphitheatre of hills which encircle it on the south and west, combine to make the site of Kukadeśvara very picturesque. The temple itself is in the Hemādpanthi style and in fair preservation; its court is strewn with portions of the carved work which have from time to time fallen, their places in the structure being filled in with plain masonry. The position of much of the carved stone work on the exterior of the building would lead to the impression that at one time the temple was partially in ruins (possibly rendered so by Musalman fanaticism) and in its restoration somewhat careless or unskillful hands pieced it together. The elaboration of the sculpture and the size of the stones used are striking. The west and only entrance is especially worthy of notice. Those in charge are peculiarly jealous of the intrusion of strangers, and even the mandapa is closed to heretical footsteps. From the doorway, however, may be seen six fine pillars, three on either side, dividing the mandapa into nave and aisles with a seventh column at the entrance to the gḍhārd. These pillars bear sculptured figures on their capitals. On the north-west of the temple is a small shrine, now in ruins, dedicated to Bhairava; either jamb of the doorway bears a dedrāpila in relief. The temple itself is protected from the severity of the weather by a thatched roof supported on a wooden structure.

which the ruin is were excavated, a large portion of the old temple might be discovered. The belief of the villagers is that the Musalmāns during their rule destroyed the building, and this belief is rather strengthened by the fact that within a stone's throw on the south is a Pir's tomb.

III.

5. Nārāyaṅgaḍ, 10 miles south-east from Junnar and 3 miles east of Nārāyaṅgaon. The hill is isolated and rises abruptly from the plain on the north-west and south. The fortifications are almost completely dismantled; portions of four bastions, however, and part of the north wall remain, though in a ruined state. This fort, said to have been built by the first great Peśvā, Bāljī Viśvanātha, was given as a sarajām to Sayājī Povār at the end of the last or the beginning of this century, with the duty of keeping the neighbouring country in a quiet state and in the interest of the Peśvā. There is a tradition in the neighbourhood that Nārāyaṅgaḍ surrendered to the British after only one shell or cannon ball had reached the interior of the fortifications. There is a small shrine to Hastahāri on the extreme summit of the hill. Water is plentiful, being supplied by two śākās or spring cisterns and by several kauds; the former are full of water even in May, and of them the Nārāyaṇa Tākā is the more famous. In this śālā, Nārāyaṇa Dova is said to have appeared, though invisible to the uninitiated, forty years ago, on which occasion the hill was for two or three years the scene of a weekly Somavāra jaṭrā attracting some thousands of persons. There are some ruins on the hill, but the only one worth mentioning is a stone doorway bearing on its lintel a figure of Gaṇapati and two attendant tigers.

III.

6. Ojhar, east from Junnar, is the supposed scene of one of the Aṣṭa Vināyaka avāṭṭras. The present temple is modern, being only a century old. It is in an enclosure which is entered under a somewhat interesting looking gateway; the sides of the gateway bear sculptured dāvāpāṭṭas, and a row of four musicians in bas-relief adorns the lintel; these figures are all gorgeously painted. On entering the enclosure two fine dīpamāṭṭas first attract attention; they are in front of an extremely fine corridor of seven cusped arches; this corridor serves the purpose of a dharmasāḍā. The temple itself is entered by three doors, each of which is sculptured on the jambs and lintel; the east entrance is the chief, and bears in relief over the lintel a figure of Gaṇapati with parrots and monkeys disporting themselves in trees. A small dome flanked by four minarets surmounts the maṇḍapa, and over the gabhārā is a śikhara adorned with the ordinary rows of niches and figures. This temple is very little frequented. For the other Aṣṭa Vināyaka's temples see Rānjāgaon in Sirur Tālukā.

III.

7. Kares'ar, 3 miles north-west from Maḍh—a very interesting temple of perhaps the eleventh century, falling to ruins.

V.—SIRUR TĀLUKĀ.

III.

1. Rānjāgaon at the junction of the Bhimā and Muthā-Mulā. Temple of Gaṇapati. The village is supposed to be the scene of one of the Aṣṭa Vināyaka avāṭṭras of that divinity. The other seven Aṣṭa Vināyaka temples are situated at Morgaon, Theur, Lenādrī, and Ojhar in the Poona Collectorate, at Pāli in the Pant Sachiv's territory, at Maḍh in the Thāna District, and at Siddhatek in the Collectorate of Ahmadnagar. The present temple at Rānjāgaon occupies, it is said, the site of an old Hemādpanthi edifice, of which four pillars remain, two of them at the entrance to the enclsure. The present shrine is said to have been constructed by Chintāmaṇa Mahārāja Dēva, two centuries back, and on the north side there is a fine corridor with a façade of 15 arches, each arched compartment being vaulted in a low conical form. This arcade is due to the Povār family, and is contemporary with the present temple. A flight of steps leads to the roof of the corridor which is flat and a pleasant place of resort during the jaṭra season, i. e. at Gaṇeśa Chaturthi. The temple consists of a māṇḍapa with rows of wooden pillars and an outer and inner gābhārā; a stone rat is stationed at the entrance of the māṇḍapa, as the usual vāhana of the elephant-snouted god. The outer gābhārā is surmounted by a small sikhara and the sanctuary by a more imposing one; both sikharas are somewhat rude; the larger rises in four storeys, the lowest being the widest, and the three higher ones being each ornamented with a frieze; a small kaṭasa, flanked by four minars completes the spire. There is a tiny shrine dedicated to Mahādeva on the extreme west, i. e. beyond the gābhārā and joined to it. The cornice of both temple and corridor is supported by brackets of the Phallic symbol type.

2. Pabal, 25 miles N.N.E. from Poona. Old temple of Nāgeśvara Mahādeva on the west of the town, said to have been built five centuries ago by Kānha Rājapāk. The māṇḍapa is divided into three small aisles by two rows of three pillars each, the outermost pillars being slightly sculptured. In front and on the east is a small tank in the Hemādpanthi style, constructed, according to tradition, by Kānha's favourite dancing girl. Flights of steps lead down to the water and the side walls contain small niches with sculptured figures. On the north-east of the temple is a fine stambha; its shaft, which stands on a lofty pedestal and supports a massive capital, is monolithic. (2) Minsān Bā's tomb, to which a mosque is attached, is situated among some fine trees in an enclosure on the north of Pabal. This lady received as saranjām Pabal and the neighbouring villages of Kendur and Loui from Bājirāv Peśvā, and though she died in the Śaivārā Pācōt Poona, she was buried in her inām town of Pābāl. She was probably a native of the north of India, and is said to have been taken captive by Sindia in his wars in Hindustān and to have been made by him a present to the Peśvā. There is nothing of architectural merit in her tomb or its surroundings.

III.

3. Talegaon Dhamdhare, 20 miles north-east from Poona (18° 40'; 74° 12'). Of the many temples in this town the most remarkable are: (1) Siddhēśvara, a large Śaiva shrine enclosed by lofty battlemented walls and built on an elevation. A Kulkarni of Talegaon, who was also Sindia's Dvān, is said to have erected it. On the east and west there are high flights of steps leading into the temple enclosure. (2) Gaṇapati's temple owes its existence to the Dhamdhare family. The sikhara surmounting the gābhārā is profusely adorned with quaint little figures in niches, and the vestibule is entered on the east and south through arched openings, and has a vaulted roof. (3) Nāth's shrine is built on the bank of the river and is dedicated to the Śāḍhu whose name it bears. On Sivāratri there is a jaṭra of about 3,000 persons to this shrine. Nāth lived in Sivājī's time, and was a friend of Itān Bā, whose tomb is in the Muslimān cemetery to north-east of the town. The townsfolk have a tradition that Nāth and Itān were great card-players, and spent most of their spare time in playing together. This shrine is supported by indas and lāṇas at Rs. 10, and is the scene of a jaṭra of about 2,000 persons on Māgha Vadya 13. (4) Vitārēśvara temple was built by one of the Mahājān family about two centuries back. There is a fine well on the north side, and an ancient dipamāla outside the enclosure. (5) Takleśvra is an old building dedicated to Mahādeva and is to the west of that of Gaṇapati. There is an old dharmaśālā opening into the bāzār through which this temple is entered. Besides these sanctuaries, there is a temple outside the town, about half a mile to the north-west, dedicated to Bhairavā,—a quaint old structure, enclosed by walls; its maṇḍapa is divided into three aisles by two rows of low stone pillars supporting brick arches.

VI.—PURANDAR TALUKĀ.

- III. 1. Malhargad, 5 miles north from Sāsavad, fort built by Bhivārāv Yasavant and Krishnaji Mādhavrāv Phānsē about 1775 A.D. There is an outer line of fortification taking the triangular shape of the plateau, and an inner square one. It contains temples of Khandobā and Mahādeva. The main entrance is at the north-east corner.
- III. 2: Jejuri, 10 miles E.S.E. from Sāsavad. Temple of Khandobā-Mahāri-Mārtanda-Bhairava-Mhāsakānta,—Khandobā, because he has a dagger; Mahāri, because he killed the deer Manimalla. The temple was built by Mahārāv Holkar and completed by Ahalyābī. Here are several short inscriptions, all modern.

VII.—BHIMATHADI TALUKĀ.

- III. 1. Dhond, 8 miles E.N.E. from Pātas, on the Bhīmā. (1) A temple of Bhairava-deva said to have been built by Mādhavji Sinda, to whom the village was given as an indm. It is of stone with a superstructure of brick. (2) Temple of Viṭṭhohādeva, by the same; also in the village a large door called "Ves" of polished stone.
- III. 2: Pātas, about 2 miles from the railway station. Temple of Nāgeśvara Mahādeva is said to have been built about 200 years ago. It is constructed of hewn, polished stones, and has an audience-hall with verandahs on both sides.
- III. 3. Supa, 8 miles S.S.W. from Pātas. (1) Dargāh of Shaman Shur Pir, with a dharmaśālā. A large fair is held on the 16th Zilkād. (2) Temple of Tukohādeva built by Anājī Rāv Marāṭhā.
- III. 4. Kurkamb, 5 miles south-east from Pātas. (1) Temple of Phirangāi Devi. (2) A similar but smaller one to the same idol stands on a hill near the village; in this latter there is an inscription dated 1631:—
- श्री धरणी तय्यर वस निरंतर वणगीजी नाईक निवाळकर त्याचे पुत्र मुण्जी नाईक
त्याचे पुत्र संमानी नाईक त्याचे पुत्र तुकाराम नाईक त्याचे पुत्र अमतराव शाहानी व
विराजी नाईक निवाळकर त्याचे पुत्र संमानी नाईक निवाळकर देसमुल प्रांत कलठण देश
याणी श्रीचे आतिथ्य देवालय समस्त सिद्ध केले. इ.स. १६८१ सौम्य नाम संतसेरे.
आमण शुद्ध पंचमी. श्रीरत्न.
- III. 5. Roti, 3 miles south of Pātas. Temple of Tukāidēvi built by the Medhō family.
- III. 6. Paṛgaon, 11 miles north-west from Pātas. A temple to the same idol, which is said to have been brought from Tuljāpur.

VIII.—INDĀPUR TALUKĀ.

III. 1. Palasdeva on the Bhmā, 13 miles north-west from Indāpur ($18^{\circ}15'$; $74^{\circ}57'$), formerly called Ratnāpur. The temple of Siva is built of stone below, and the upper portion is brick.

III. 2. Narsingpur, 12 miles south-east from Indāpur at the junction of the Bhmā and Nirā. Temple of Śrī Lakṣmī-Narasinha, built by the Vinchurkar about 150 years ago. It is octagonal and built of black stone. The apex is of copper, gilt with gold. It is 70 feet high.

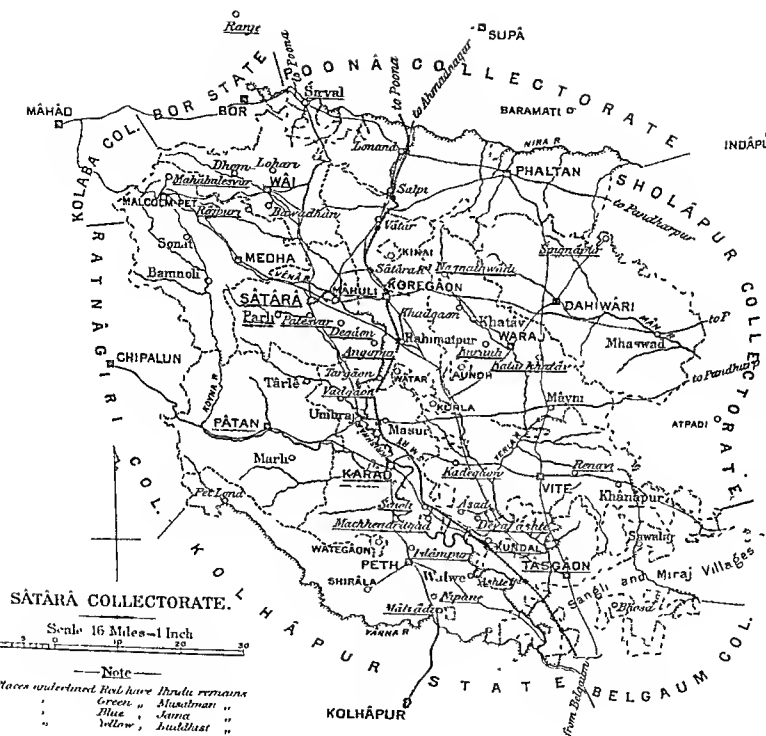

Pilgrimages are held in the month of Vaiśākha. The idol of this temple is known by the name of Śrī Lakṣmī-Narasinha, whence it is called the temple of Narsingpur. A fable is given in the Purānas called the Narasinha Mahātmya. It is as follows.—Narasinha became incarnate for the sake of one of his votaries called Pralhāda. Pralhāda made a sand piṇḍī for worship and through mistake left it there, and it afterwards became established. The reason for the name of Śrī Lakṣmī-Narasinha is that the god was represented with a lion's face and man's body, and with a woman by him.

BHOR STATE.

III. 1. Sirval, 39 miles north from Sātārā. Temple of Kedāresvara, built by Ambāji Devji Dēspandē about 200 years ago, is a large and fine building about 200 years old. It was struck by lightning about six years ago. There is a series of seventeen Buddhist caves about two miles south-west from the town, one of them with a dagoba. They are of the same plain type as those at Karād (Cave Temples of India.)

III. 2. Rānje, 14 miles south-west from Poona: a Vaiṣṇava temple dedicated to Lakṣmī-Nārāyaṇa.

Inscription.—On the temple, dated Śaka 1684.

arches. The dome is of brick and, as far as it has any geometrical form at all, is conical; but it is broken up into gradually diminishing rows of stucco ornamentation, in which are niches filled with images. On each side of the entrance there is a dīpamālā. (2.) On the same side of the river is the temple of Bilveśvara Mahādeva built about 1742 A.D. by Śrīpatra Pant Pratinidhi. The absence of Muhammadan forms shows that it is much older than the last. It consists of a vestibule and shrine, but the vestibule is square or nearly so, and has no opening but a low door. The roof is supported by a few pillars, each of which is in alternate portions square, round, or octagonal. The front is about 30 feet long, and plain. The sides gradually contract by a series of offsets, which run up nearly to the top of the dome, so that the back wall is only 5 or 6 feet long. With the exception of the upper portion of the dome, which is of brick covered and ornamented with stucco, this temple is built of grey stone, and has a very solid appearance. It is not enclosed in any way. The hall is so close to the door of the vestibule that there is hardly room to enter. It is surmounted by a square stone canopy supported on each side by a broad low pointed arch, and its style seems to indicate a later date than the temple. In front are a few tombs where Gosāvis and other holy men have been buried. The ghāt near this spot was built by Anandrāy Bhivrāy Dēshmukh Aogāpurkar about four years before this temple. (3.) The next is on the same bank as the last two, but at some distance from them and the village, and close to the Sātārā and Koregaon road, which in fact skirts it. It was built and dedicated to Rāmeśvara by Paraśurāma Nārāyaṇa Ṃgal of Dehgaon about 1700 A.D. Looking at it from the opposite bank, the chief object that attracts the observer's notice is the very fine flight of steps leading up to it from the river-bed. One flight with its broad platform was commenced by Bājirāy II., but never finished. Though forming part of the whole structure, it would lead, if finished, rather to the side of the temple than to the temple itself. The other flight begins nearly where the first leaves off, and at an angle to it, and is said to be also the work of Paraśurāma Ṃgal. Half-way up it on either side is a small cloister of two arches, which would be perfectly circular but for a small notch in the keystone. The roof is domed and formed by concentric layers of stone, each projecting over the one below, and so diminishing in circumference till only a small hole is left sufficient to admit one stone. At the top of the steps are two dīpamālās, one on either side; on the right is a small shrine with an image of the Trimūrti. In front is a bull with his head towards the door of the vestibule. He is very richly ornamented with chains and bells. Between his feet is a small linga overshadowed by the cobra, with two women paying adoration to it. The canopy is supported at the corners by pillars, which are square and round or octagonal in alternative courses. Above is a low octagonal dome on two courses—the lower plain, the upper with a few figures. Above this, again, is a representation of the lotus, but the stucco has fallen off. The doorway consists of a porch of stone supported on half pillars. The vestibule is too small to require any support for its roof. The only light it receives is from the low door by which it is entered. There are three domes: the lowest is over the vestibule; next comes one a little higher; and adjoining it the highest of all. They are, as usual, of brick and stucco surmounted by a representation of the lotus. Behind the temple is a cloister of five arches like those already described. A small door leads into a shrine with five small figures in black basalt. The central one is a representation of Śiva and Pārvatī. At one end is Hanumān in an upright position with his hands clasped together. (4.) Temple of Sāgameśvara Mohādeva is, as its name indicates, close to the junction of the two rivers, on the west bank of the Krishna and the north bank of the Vēṇā and nearly opposite No 2 From the bank of the Kṛṣṇā two flights of steps lead up to the courtyard wall, in which there is a small door opening into the quadrangular court in which the temple is situated The temple consists of a small open verandah, in which there is a roughly executed painting of Lākṣmī, and a vestibule and shrine In front is the sacred bull under a canopy supported by four pillars The breadth at the back is gradually diminished by a series of offsets which are carried up into the dome. The architecture is pure Hindu The pillars are round or octagonal and square in alternate courses, and the roof is formed of long stones which stretch diagonally from pillar to pillar so as to form a series of lozenge or diamond shaped spaces, filled in with square stones of less size The flying buttresses to the platform of the sacred bull and the top of the dome deserve notice As usual the body of the building is of basalt and the dome of brick and stucco, like No 2 It is said to have been built by Śrīpatrav Pant Pratimdhī, and its date may be approximately fixed at 1679 A.D. Just below this temple, and at the actual junction of the rivers, is a triangular plot of ground occupied by several tombs built over the burial-places of a Gosavi (named Bānāpurī) and his disciples The largest, under which the Gosavi himself is said to be buried, is an octagonal building of grey basalt, surmounted by a low dome The sides are open, and the triangular heads of the openings are scalloped and richly carved above, a broad ledge is carried round supported on elegant scrolls Inside is a linga and sacred bull The next in size is square with a horse shoe opening about 6 feet high and carved pilasters on each side The dome is of brick plastered and fluted linga and bull inside The third is a mere canopy supported on square pillars over the linga and bull, the dome is fluted There are two others which do not deserve any special notice (5) Viśvēśvara Mahādeva, the largest of the Mahuli temples on the south side of the Vēṇā, at its confluence with the Kṛṣṇā, is said to have been built by Śrīpatrav Pant Pratimdhī about 1735 A.D. It is of basalt, and enclosed by an irregular shaped courtyard, open on this side of the river, from which it is approached by a flight of steps The high platform on which it is raised, the low colonnade which runs round the greater part of it, the short thick pillars in alternate courses of round, octagonal, and square, the lozenge figured stone roof, the breadth increasing from the front by offsets, and then decreasing in a similar way behind, show that it is a building of purely Hindu architecture The length from back to front is about 50 feet. The greatest breadth is 20 feet, the least 5 feet The interior consists of a vestibule and shrine In the wall of the former there are two images of Ganapati and Lakṣmī respectively The latter is of marble The dome is of the usual material The squareness of the form is to this and other domes of the same period contrasts with the round domes of a later time The animal forms carved in the capitals of the pillars and the corbices, deserve notice The sacred bull is on the usual platform surmounted by a canopy and octagonal dome, the niches of which are filled with mythological figures, and are divided from each other by figures of men and elephants. On two sides of the courtyard are cloisters with broad low pointed arches and square pillars, they are for cooking purposes, or hostels for visitors to the temple On another side is a building of a similar kind but incomplete The arches of it are narrower and more pointed At the entrance of the vestibule is a fine bell on which there is apparently no writing but the date, in English figures, of 1744 I could not glean any information as to its history, but it was, I suspect taken by the Marathas from a Portuguese church in the Konkan In one of the temples on the Kṛṣṇā at Menavali near Wai there is a bell which is said to have been presented by the builder of the temple the great Nana Phadnis - There is a tradition in that case that it was taken from the Portuguese, a tradition which is almost converted into fact by the inscription "Bene sonantibus cymbalis laudato Dominum." A similar bell is said to have been brought by Nānā Phadnavis out of Mābuli Fort and given to the temple at Bhimā Śankara, where it now is. (6) Temple of Rāmaohandra at the back of the last, to which it is very inferior in every respect, is of basalt, and said to have been built by Trimbak Viśvanāth Pēthē in 1772 A.D. It is very small, and consists merely of verandah and shrine. In the latter are figures, in brass, of Rāma, Lakshmeṇa, and Sītābāi. The wall behind them is panelled with broad low arches and painted with flowers, &c. The dome consists of only two polygonal courses. (7) Temple of Viṭhobā built by Jotipant Bhāgvat of Chinchnerā about A.D. 1730. It originally consisted of a small verandah, with carved wooden pillars opening into the shrine by a low Muhammadan arch. A hall or vestibule, with wooden pillars and door all round was added fifteen or twenty years ago. The roof is hung with lamps. (8) Temple of Krishṇabāi, built by Krishṇa Dikshit Chiplūnkar about 1754 A.D., does not deserve particular notice. (9) Temple to Krishṇēśvara Mahādeva built by Krishṇa Dikshit Chiplūnkar, about 1790 A.D. (10) Temple to Bhairavadeva, built by Krishṇabhat Tātke about 1770 A.D. It is on a very small scale, and consists of shrine and open vestibule or verandah with three small arches. A hall with wooden pillars like that in No. 7 has been recently added. (11) A temple with a handsome flight of steps from the river, begun by the Rājā of Sātārā in 1865. It is on the right of the road from Sātārā. Besides these temples there are, on each side of the road leading to the ferry, several tombs or cenotaphs to members of the late royal family of Sātārā and others. There is some simple but handsome stone carving on one or two of them. The figure of a dog sitting, which is to be seen on one of them, is said to mark the burial-place of a favourite dog of Rājā Shāhu called the "Veḍā Rājā" from his eccentricities. It is probably the one which on one occasion he dressed in gold brocade, and exhibited in full darbār, and for whose use he kept up a palanquin establishment. The dog had once saved him from a tiger (vide Grant Duff's History of the Marāṭhās, vol. II. page 30). (12) The temple of Bhārgavarāma, in the small shrine of which are the images of Parāśurāma, his father Jamadagni, and his mother Reṇukā. It has indā land attached to it.

3. Perli is the name given to an isolated hill about 6 miles west of Sātārā. The fort at the top is called Sajjanagaḥ, and was built by one of the Emperors of Dehli about 700 years ago. Additions were made by one Nāra Ballāl Senī, Peshvā, in 1775 A.D. It is now very much out of repair: over the doorway is a Persian inscription,—not translated. The temple was built about 1660 A.D. by Akābāi and Dirākhar Gosāvi, disciples of Śivājī's spiritual guide, Rāmdās Svāmī, to whom the temple is dedicated and who lies buried here. Parāśurām Bhāu Śrīgāykar repaired and ornamented this temple in 1800 and 1830 A.D., and Vajināth Bhāgvat, of Yavateśvara, built the verandah. It is of basalt with dome of brick and chunam.

III.

4. Angāpur.—The temple, which is dedicated to Gaṇapati, was built by Anandārā Bhuvār, Desmukha of Angāpur, in 1779 A.D. It is of stone, with a dome of brick and stucco.

III.

5. Patesvara, 6 miles south-east from Sātārā. Near the summit of a hill called Pātāvara are some five caves. Besides the caves and buildings attached to them there are three or four temples almost on the summit of the hill. One of them, sacred to Mahādeva, is of moderate size, enclosed in a courtyard with a fine flight of steps leading down to a tank close adjoining. The other temples are small, sacred to Mahideva and other idols.

The caves are now, with the exception of No. 4, crowded with lingas cut out of detached blocks of stone, some of very large size. Including those in the temples, 43 were counted altogether. These caves were probably of Brahmanical origin (see Jour. B. B. R. A. Soc., vol. III. Part II. p. 63).

- III. 6. Degaon—Temple of Śrī Pītēśvara with large sabhā-maṇḍapa and śikhara.
- III. 7. Khadgaon.—An excavation to the west called Morghal.

II.—JĀVLI TĀLEKĀ.

- III 1. Mahabalesvara.—Temple described J. B. B. R. A. Soc., Vol. IX. p. 250; vol. X. pp. 1-18.
- III. 2. Ra'jpuri, 4 miles south-west from Wāi and about 3 west of Bāwadhan. A group of rudely cut Brahminical caves, about 1,300 feet above the valley. They communicate with one another by a passage inside the rock. They face eastward and extend about 100 feet in length.
- Ia. Inscription.—A detached slab of stone, leaning against the front of the cave, bears an inscription in old Devanāgarī characters.

III.—WĀI TĀLEKĀ.

- III. 1. Bāwadhan, 4 miles south-east of Wāi. Two small caves at about 600 feet above the level of the valley and very difficult of access; the most southerly is a cell 9' by 7', with bed-place at the back and a stone bench on the right side; the other is similar and about 65 yards northward.
- III 2. Loharī, 4 miles north of Wāi. On the south-western face of a short lofty spur are eight excavations in a line extending about a furlong along the hill, and at an elevation of at least 400 feet above the valley. The four largest are evidently early Buddhist monastic residences, and one of these has had two rows of pillars, three in each, from front to back, and the remains of some sculpture on the right hand wall, which, however, may possibly have been an after insertion; another, close to it, has a dagoba in a shrine 10 feet square at the back, a cell on each side of it, and four in the right wall, with rock beds.
- III. 3. Wāi.—At this place there are 49 temples built by the Rāste family alone, besides others of older date; as it is unnecessary to particularize each, only those of importance are mentioned. Commencing from above, the first group of buildings is on the north bank of the Krishna, and consists of a ghāt vādā and temple. (1) The ghāt goes by the name of Gaṅgāpuri and is a flight of 12 steps. The first portion, 200 feet in length, was built by Gaṅgādhar Rāste of cut-stone in 1789. To this, one Bhāu Josī added 76 feet and Bājirāo II. 80 feet. There is now, therefore, an unbroken length of 356 feet. At the back of this is a plain brick wall through which a door opens into the street with the Gaṅgāpuri Vādā (now the Munsif's Court) on the left and the temple of Umā Mahēśvara Panchāyatana on the right. The temple on the right was, like the ghāt, built by Gaṅgādhar Rāste and about five years before it. It consists of a vestibule and shrine, and is about 40 feet high. It has all the Muhammadan forms of architecture common at the period. In the four corners are separate shrines dedicated to Vishnu, Lakshmi, Ganpati, and Sūrya;—Vishnu's is on the left on entering, and has a wooden maṇḍapa, the back wall of which is covered with figures, so are also the outer walls. The great cluster of river temples begins at some distance nearly opposite to the travellers' bungalow. (2) A shrine with dome containing a marble bull and the image of Maṇḍādeva Dhākleśvara. It stands on a low ghāt, 75 feet long. (3) In a line with it, but near the bank on an upper ledge of the same ghāt, is another temple to Gaṅgārāmaśvara Maṇḍādeva, built by Gaṅgādhar Rāste about 1780 A.D. It is of basalt, and consists of an open verandah with 3 scalloped arches and a shrine. The breadth in front is 32 feet. The length from front to back is about 26 feet, with the dome, which is of brick and stucco with blank panels; the height is probably about 40 feet. In front is the sacred bull with a plain canopy. (4) A temple to Ganapati built by Gaṅgatrāy Bhikāji Rāste in 1762 at a cost of Rs. 1,50,000, and a ghāt 163 feet in length, built by Anandrāy Bhikāji. Besides the usual verandah and shrine, in which is a huge image of Ganapati painted red, there is a covered court or maṇḍapa 60 feet by 30. The roof is flat, and composed of square cut stones cemented with chunam. The walls are of the unusual thickness of 4 feet, which gives considerable dignity to the small arches, 5 on a side and 3 at the end, with which they are pierced. Except the dome, which is pyramidal or conical and of brick covered with white plaster and fluted, the material used is grey basalt. The total height is about 70 feet. (5) Ascending the bank is a temple to Kāśī Viśveśvara Maṇḍādeva, standing in a quadrangular court 216 feet by 95 feet, surrounded by a wall. The temple was built by Anandrāy Bhikāji in 1757 A.D., and consists of vestibule and shrine. Its length from front to back is 49 feet. The façade is about 28 feet from side to side. In style the Muhammadan forms prevail to a considerable extent. The spire has three rows of figures and a Muhammadan dome; the maṇḍapa of the temple is domed. The large bull in front, under a plain canopy with plain scalloped arches, is carved out of a magnificent piece of black basalt; the bells and flowers with which it is decorated are very finely cut. The most conspicuous part of this building, however, is a covered Kuṇḍa maṇḍapa at the east entrance, the roof of which is of squared stone cemented with chunam, and supported on 16 lofty pillars 10 feet apart, with neat semicircular moulded arches between them. On each side is a dīpandī. (6) Temple to Maṇḍālakshmi built by Anandrāy Bhikāji in 1778 A.D. at a cost of Rs. 2,75,630. It is away from the river, on the east side of the bāzār. It is about 70 feet high, and consists of a vestibule and shrine, which together measure about 70 feet from back to front. The façade is 39 feet from side to side. The vestibule is open in front with two pillars and pilasters in antis. The corners at the top are rounded off by scalloped work. There is a trap-door in the floor, and the roof is formed of large slabs stretching from lintel to lintel. The maṇḍapa has two doors on each side, and the porch is wider than the maṇḍapa. The maṇḍapa has 5 pillars in depth with 2 in width, and on a lower step an additional range over a stylobate approached by three steps and tread. (7) Temple to Vishnu, built in 1774 A.D. by Anandrāy Bhikāji Rāste at a cost of Rs. 2,16,250. A covered court 48' x 18' with a roof of cut stone without intermediate support leads to a raised verandah with three small Muhammadan arches, behind which is the shrine. The walls are very thick, 5 scalloped arches on each side and 3 in front—a small chātrī of Garuda in front and a marble image.

The following temples are enumerated to complete the list of those on the river, but do not call for any special mention. The date is a clue to the style of architecture. The prevalence of Muhammadan forms may be assumed in those that are less than a century old. (8) The temple to Mahādeva, built by Govindpant Velankar about 1744 A.D., east of Kāśī Viśveśvara. (9) Temple to the same by Bābā Appā Sāheb Sāthē, 1854 A.D. (10) Temple to the same with dharmāśālā attached by Chimandrāy Nārāyaṇa. (11) Temple to Dattātreyā, built by a mendicant named Venkoba Bābā in 1861 A.D. on a ghāt made by Ānandrāy Bhikāji, 1785 A.D. (12) Temple to Mahādeva by Chimambhat Dhirulkar about 1808 A.D. (13) To the same, built about 1760 A.D. (14) To the same, built by Meghaśyām-Nāyak Megrekar about 1740 A.D. (15) Temple to Vithobā by Bāi Sāheb, the great-grandmother of the Bhor Pnat, mentioned as the builder of a temple at Māhuli. (16) Temple to Mahādeva, built by Vishṇa Bhat Dikṣhit about 1760 A.D. (17) Temple to Mahādeva, built by Venkambhat Dhakne about 1760 A.D. (18) The Rāste's Vādīs.—Of these there are several in and about the town of Wāi. The only one that requires special notice is the Moti Bāgh, which is about 1½ miles out of Wāi, standing in a large garden with water-tower and fountains. The vādī was built about 1789 A.D. by Ānandrāy Bhikāji Rāste, and is said to have cost Rs. 1,02,000. The interior walls are covered with paintings, the colour of which is unfortunately rapidly disappearing. The ceiling is very elaborately painted and gilded. (J. B. B. R. A. S., Part XIII. p. 55, Wāi Caves; Cave Temples of India.)

III. 4. Meaavali.—About two miles from Wāi. Temple of Kṛiṣṇābāi (see also end of entry "Mābni").

III. 5. Dhoni.—On the north bank of the Kṛiṣṇā, about 5 miles above Wāi; the principal temple is between the village and the river, and is dedicated to Mahādeva. It is built of basalt, and consists of a shrine with a verandah in front of three small Saracenic scalloped arches supported on pillars about 6 feet high. The arches are covered with leaves and what appear to be fir-cones. Beyond the arches there is on each side of the façade a broad band of wall carved in arabesques. The height of the building, including the dome, is probably not more than 40 feet. Opposite the entrance is a ball of polished basalt under a canopy surmounted by a dome. It is seated upon the back of a turtle (which is found in nearly all the temples above mentioned) represented in the act of swimming. To complete the illusion, it is intended that the surrounding basin should be filled with water, which does not appear to be now done. Around this principal temple are four others dedicated, respectively, to Nṛasiṃha, Gaṇapati, Lakṣmī, and Viṣṇu. Several of the images in these temples are of yellow marble, said to have been brought from Āgrā. One, which stands outside by itself, is a representation of the Śiva Pañcāyatana. Four heads look to the four cardinal points of the compass, and the fifth to the sky. The five temples were built about 1780 A.D. by one Mahādevarāy Sivarāma, Sāvār of Poona, where his descendants now live. A side door from the courtyard of this temple leads to a ghāt built by one Nārāyaṇrāy Vaidya about 100 years ago. On the right is a small temple to Rāma attributed to Bājirāy II. The conical dome has been broken short off by the fall of a tree. Below this, and facing the river, is a sort of cloister containing an image of Gaṇapati. The arches are pointed. The date probably about 1780 A.D.

III. About half a mile up the river is a small temple to Mahādeva, built by the Rājā Śāhū, who reigned at Sātārā between 1703 and 1750 A.D., and came to Dhoni to bathe in the Kṛiṣṇā.

6.—Mhasva. Two banyan trees. There is no record whatever of the age of these trees. They are known to be at least 200 years old, and they are probably double that age. Although the centres have decayed, the outer trunks do not show the slightest signs of any diminution in their vitality. The larger tree is 450 yards in circumference; the smaller about 100 yards less.

IV.—KOREGÂON TÂLUKÂ.

III.

Dhuma'va'di, close to the Sâtârâ Road railway station. A cave in which is an image of Pârsvanâtha about two and a half feet high with the head broken off. The cave is very irregular in shape and is nearly filled with water. About half-way up the hill is an excavation known as the "Khâmb tâki," originally no doubt a cave temple, now filled with mud and water to within three feet of the roof. The roof is supported by massive pillars. These, where intact, bear a simple ornamentation. On the top of the hill are the remains of an old fort, and the entrance to the upper cave is enclosed within the wall which defends the gate. The most important remains on the top of the hill are a substantially built ma'djid and a simple stone-building which may have been a bomb proof magazine. There is a tomb of a Musalmân Pir still kept in repair.

1. Singna'pur, about 44 miles E.N.E. of Sâtârâ ($17^{\circ} 51'$; $74^{\circ} 43'$), the scene of a large yearly Hindu festival held in honour of Sambhu Mahâdeva, or Kamalâsvara, to which as many as 40,000 people go. The temple is on a hill, and thus forms a striking object from some distance. It is built on a plan similar to that of many of the temples of the Dakhian, and consists of a courtyard, an ante-chamber, and an idol chamber. It was rebuilt in 1703 by one Hasvant Raikbogai in the time of Shivâji II. The courtyard is an oblong, about 129 feet long and 92 broad, entered from all four sides by gateways, and contains, besides the temple proper, various small rooms, a nagdrkhâna and a small temple of Nandi. The temple itself consists of an oblong ante-chamber, 46 feet by 49 feet, entered from the north, south, and east by three small doorways, about $8\frac{1}{2}$ feet square. To the west is another doorway, 4 feet wide by 6 feet high, communicating with the idol chamber. This room is about 11 feet long and wide and 17 feet high, and in it is the image of Mahâdeva Sambhu. Over the temple is a spire of brick, the rest of the temple being of stone; throughout it are carved images of gods and mythological beings, and also coloured representations of animals.

II

2. Katarkhatav, 35 miles E.S.E. from Sâtârâ ($17^{\circ} 34'$; $74^{\circ} 35'$). The temple of Shri Katarâsvara; the walls and pillars are of stone and carved. It is said to be very old, and measures 45' by 25'. The upper portion is of brick.

Inscription.—On the front is a Dhvanigari inscription weather-worn.

III

3. Kuruali, 4 miles S.S.E. from Khatâr. A similar old temple, but larger; repaired in late times.

Inscriptions.—On the pavement, but much effaced.

- III. 4. Wadgaon, 24 miles south-east from Sātārā. Temple of Jayarām Svāmi, with some inscriptions.
- III. 5. Na'gna'thva'di, 20 miles east from Sātārā. Temple of Nāganaātha, partly cut in the rock; a genuine Snake temple, with an old inscription.
- III. 6. Sangames'vara, 36 miles east of Sātārā. An old Śaiva temple, with carved pillars and effaced inscription.

VI.—KHATAV TĀLUKĀ.

VII.—KHĀNĀPUR TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Devara'shte, 16 miles north-west from Tāsgāon ($17^{\circ} 10'$; $74^{\circ} 27'$). An old octagonal temple of Śāgaraśvara, with three reservoirs of water.
- III. 2. Kadegaon, 10 miles N.N.E. from Devara'shtē. Four temples of Eknāth, one of Māruti, and two of Viṭhobā; one of the latter with a maṇḍapa in front.
- III. 3. Kundal, 4 miles south-east from Devara'shtē and 14 W.N.W. from Tāsgāon. Close to this village are the Kundal Caves of which there are two groups; the principal one of thirteen caves is in the north-eastern face of the hill, the other of three caves is in the southern face. In the first, Cave 1 measures 16' by 15'; No. 2, 12' 6" by 7' 6"; No. 3, 27' 6" by 22', having a row of 3 plain square pillars across the centre; No. 4 measures 14' 6" by 9'; No. 5 is a water-tank 11' square, with steps within, leading down to the water; No. 6 is another cistern 5' by 11' with a doorway, and having a large moulded pilaster, or half pillar carved on the left wall: the partition between this and No. 5 is cut away at half its height, leaving a half column in the centre corresponding to the pilaster opposite. This is the only original ornament in the group. No. 7 measures 26' 6" by 17' 6"; Nos. 8, 9, and 10 are smaller rooms. No. 11 is a wide passage round a shrine, behind which is a deep cistern. In the second group, No. 14 is a room 19' by 15' with a recess 7' square at the back, on the back wall of which is a rude modern bas-relief covering the whole. On the right hand portion of the back wall of the main room are remains of two old figures, life-size and in high relief; nothing remains of one but the feet, and the other is much worn. No. 16 seems to be partially a natural cavern, with a deep cistern in one corner and a built front; an artificial ceiling within is supported by 15 rude stone pillars. These caves are evidently Brahmanical. (Surveyed.)
- III. 4. Ā'sad, 6 miles north-west from Kundal. In a khind leading to Yerē is a small tank cut in the solid rock, the front said to be supported by a pillar.
- III. 5. Senoli, 5 miles west from Ā'sad. In the hill over the village is a small natural cavern under a low scarp; a rude masonry cell has been built in it, and several little wooden bulls and other idols lie about.
- III. 6. Renā'vi, 18 miles north-east from Kundal ($17^{\circ} 17'$, $74^{\circ} 10'$). On the edge of the tableland near the village, in a projecting summit of laterite, is a small irregular cell with an entrance only about 2 feet high. There are several temples round about: one rather ancient.

Insription :—In Dēvanāgarī on the door-sill of the portico of this temple.

* VIII.—TASGAON TALUKA.

1. Ta'sgaon, 60 miles south-east from Sātara and 15 north of Miraj ($17^{\circ} 13' 74'' 40''$). A temple of considerable size and celebrity, dedicated to Ganapati. It was begun in 1779 by Paraśurām Bhān Patavārdhan, and finished in 1799 by Appā Sāheb, his son. It consists of a courtyard and a temple inside. The most striking feature is the gopura or tower, over the principal entrance to the courtyard, consisting of seven storeys, gradually decreasing till they culminate in a mere ridge. The lower storey is of stone and the remainder of brick. In the courtyard is the temple itself, over which is a brick spire. The body of the temple is of stone undecorated with sculpture, but on the walls outside are rude paintings of mythological subjects. In the temple there are images of Ganapati, Viṣṇu, Śrīya, and a goddess. Some of the devotees reside in the courtyard.

II.

2. Bhosa, 9 miles south-east from Tasgaon, 10 miles N.N.E. from Miraj ($16^{\circ} 57' 74'' 46''$). On the top of a high hill near the village are a number of curious cave-temples with Kanarese inscriptions on slabs. On the very summit of the hill is a tower with a stair inside; it is a station of the Trigonometrical Survey.

IX.—VĀLVĀ TALUKA.

1. Nipani (Yede). A fine temple of Mallikārjuna on a hill.

2. Machhindragad ($17^{\circ} 9' 74'' 29''$). A temple of Machhindranātha.

X.—KARĀD TALUKA.

IIa.

Karād, about 30 miles S.S.E. from Sātara at the junction of the Koyanā and Krishnā rivers ($17^{\circ} 17' 74'' 14''$). (1) About 3 miles S.S.W. from the town, at the angle of the junction of the Krishnā and Koyanā valleys, is a group of about fifty-four Buddhist caves, of a very plain and probably mostly early type, generally resembling the groups at Kndā, Mahād and elsewhere south of Poona and Bombay (described in Jour. Bom. B. R. As Soc., Vol. III. Pt. II. p. 58; Pt. XIII. p. 58; Arch. Sur. Report, IV.; and in Cave Temples of India) (Surveyed.)

IIb.

(2) The Jami Masjid with two lofty dome-crowned minarets stands in the middle of the town. It was built, according to an inscription in the interior, by one Ibrāhīm Khān, son of Kamalkhān, probably a Thānedār in the years 1566-69, during the reign of Alī Adil Shāh of Bijāpur, when the kingdom of Bijāpur was still flourishing. The mosque and minarets stand on a stone platform about 50 feet square and 31 feet high; the latter rise to a height of about 40 feet above this platform, and are dome-shaped. For 8 feet they are made of stone, and the remainder of the structure is of brick-work, considerably cracked and unsound. One minaret in particular is in an unsafe condition, owing to a curb of wood, which had been inserted at a considerable height from the ground, having become rotten. The mosque itself is an ordinary stone structure of considerable size. Both it and the minarets are decorated with carving and covered with plaster, but not painted. In the mosque, on the arches and pillars, are several inscriptions in Persian and Arabic. The following are translations made by the Oriental Translator:—
(1) On a pillar. "Ibrāhīm Khān bin Kamāl Khān bin Ismā'el Khān, servant in the house of God." (2) Round a pillar: When the assistance of God shall come and the victory and they shall see the people enter into the religion of God by troop, celebrate the praise of thy Lord, and ask pardon of him, for he is inclined to forgive" (3) 'During the time of Shah Ali Adil Shah, the shelter of all the people and the shadow of the favour of God—may he continue faithful and enjoy health and khalat (or grant) to Ibrahim Kamil Khan, a friend of the family" (4) On another pillar "The beggarly, powerless and dustlike and powerless Pehlvan Ali bin Ahmad Isfahani, a servant of God in this house of God Sunah 963 Titled (-) Tuzyet Khan completed on this date Pray for the welfare of the builder of this mosque" (5) An Arabic inscription on a pillar "May God forgive its builder for the sake of Muhammad and his descendants" (6) An Arabic inscription on the top of an arch "I bear witness that there is certainly no God but God, that he is only one and that he has no sharers, and I bear witness that Muhammad is certainly his servant and prophet" (7) There is no inscription at the foot of an arch in Kufic characters which cannot be made out (a rubbing is desiderated) (8) On the top there are the following inscriptions "O Ali, there is nobody young but Ali There is no sword but the 'Zul Fikr' God send blessing to Muhammad the chosen [of God] Ali the approved, Hassan the elect (of God), Husain who became a martyr at Korbala, Zaimul Abidin Muhammad Bizar Ji fir Sadik Musa ul Kizim, Muhammad Tah, Ali Naki Hassan Aslikiri, Muhammad Madhi the most high and glorious God hath said But he only shall visit the temples of God who believeth in God and the last day and is constant at prayer, and prayeth the legal alms, and feareth God alone These perhaps may become of the number of those who are rightly directed "Do ye reckon the giving drink to the pilgrims and the visiting of the holy temple to be actions as meritorious as those performed by him who believeth in God and the last day and fighteth for the religion of God? The most high and glorious God hath said—Regularly perform thy prayer at the declension of the sun, at the first darkness of the night, and the prayer of daybreak, for the prayer of daybreak is borne witness unto by the angels, and watch some part of the night in the same exercise as a work of supererogation, for peradventure the Lord will raise thee to an honourable station And say—O Lord, cause me to enter with a favourable entry and cause me to come forth with a favourable exiting forth, and grant me from thee an assisting power

VI—PATAN TALUKA

I a

Patan 21 miles SSW from Satara and 20 miles WNW from Karid Two or three miles to the north-west of Patan, in the hills bounding the Keda valley on the west, are two Buddhist caves. They are in a ravine under the main hills, their position is marked by a large thirteeth temple on a spur above at a considerably higher elevation. They are cut in a small overhanging scarp in the old bed and the water falls over in front. The platform in front has been broken and worn away till it now leaves a scarcely practicable path from one to the other. The larger cave consists of a room 19 feet by 18 the front, much ruined has had a doorway with a window 3 feet wide on each side. On the right hand side near the front is a recess 2½ feet above the floor and ½ feet long. In the left angle at the back is a seat 9 long and 2½ broad. At the back are two cells 6½ square the left one containing a bed or bench 1 foot in height. Between them in the middle of the back, is a recess 2½ feet from the ground 6 wide and 2 deep. Close to this on the right side is the other cave 10 wide at the front 12 at the back, and about 10 feet high and ½ ft high. It contains a very perfect dagoba of the plain pattern of upper stupa style, with the chhatra curved on the roof. The doorway is 4 wide

III.—AHMADNAGAR ZILLA.

I.—AHMADNAGAR TALUKA.

1. Ahmadnagar. A few only of its old Mahammadan buildings remain, among which, perhaps, the little Damri Masjid is the most interesting, though the great octagonal tomb of Salabat Khan is best known. Beside these two buildings, there are the Fariabagh, the tomb of Nizam Ahmad Shah, the Bibisti Bagh, Alamgir's Dargah, and a few other buildings of lesser note, together with the fort. The little Damri Masjid is a small building of very neat design, and is decorated with surface ornament, much after the style of the Andu Masjid and similar buildings at Bijapur. It is, perhaps, not generally known that Alamgir, or Aurangzib, was buried in two tombs, one of which is at Ahmadnagar. The other is the well-known tomb at Rauza above the Elura caves and not far from Daulatabad. It would seem that his body was embalmed after death, when his heart and intestines were buried at Ahmadnagar. Over these has been built a large platform upon which is a masonry tomb. Beside it is the usual mosque and other accompanying buildings, and the whole is surrounded by a wall. It lies some distance outside the city on the east. (Surveyed.)

II a. 2. Mehkri, 7 miles east from Ahmadnagar. Salabat Khan's tomb, commonly called Chaud Bibi's Mahal, an octagonal dome surrounded by a three-storeyed verandah: it is 100 feet high and about the same in maximum diameter; now used as a military sanitarium. (Surveyed.)

II.—PARNER TALUKA.

II a. 1. Dhoke, near Takli, 12 miles north of Parnar:—The Dhokeshvarn Cave is a large hall with triple cells, on the east side of one of two rugged hills rising from a stony plateau. The largest is 20 yards deep and 15 wide, the front open and supported by two massive square pillars and two pilasters; a little inside of these another similar row supports a great architrave running right across the temple; and within this, again, is the shrine, hollowed out of a rectangular block left standing from floor to roof, and surrounded by a dark passage.

The chief object of worship is a mean little linga in the central shrine; but there is another to the right of it, faced by a large Nandi carved in situ on the same side; and nearer the light, in a sort of chapel, is a four-armed figure grasping several weapons. One is a live cobra; another, perhaps, the damru or drum, the others indistinguishable. This figure is worshipped under the name of Kala Bhairava. Opposite him are eight devas called Ashtanatarah (one has the head of a pig) accompanied by Bhringi and Gayapati. They appear in the Dhumar Lena at Elura, and in the chapel in the east wing of the great cave at Elephanta. Besides, there are giant devrapilas, Lakshmi attended by elephants (on the central architrave), and a multitude of other figures; some cut in situ, others on detached or even imported stones, and evidently of various ages up to the present. The lesser cave is a triple cell; the inner part separated from the outer by a dwarf partition without gap or doorway. It is approached by a risky stair in the rock, south of the big cave; between them is a larger cistern full of good water. There is no inscription except an unimportant one in modern Marāthi on a small thridage outside the large cave. This cave may perhaps be ascribed to the latter part of the 8th century A.D. (Ind. Ant. V. II.; Cave Temples of India.) (Surveyed.)

III. 2. Vaḍgasa Darya, 9 miles north-west from Pārner. Enclosed in the wild beauty of a little glen, are some natural caverns under a cliff by a waterfall, which have been altered by modern masonry. There are a few coarse sculptures on the rock and on detached stones, but no architectural interest attaches to the place.

III. 3. Pārner, 20 miles west by south from Ahmadnagar. Temple of Sangamesvara or Tryambakeśvara at the junction of two small nālas. The ground plan is the normal double-broken diamond or śānro; not very much faceted, there being only three superior re-entering angles on the front sides of the maṇḍapa and one lesser similar angle near the front porch. There have been three porches, as usual. All of them are now in ruins, the front one least so. Its door strongly resembles the inner door of Temple No. II. at Belgaum, but has not the pierced flanking panels. The pillars are more in the style of temple No. I. at Belgaum. Four large pillars, with the help of the walls and surviving pilasters, support the roof, composed of nine small rough domes. This would appear to have been the original plan, but the whole roof has been destroyed (tradition says by the first Masalmān invaders) and restored from a height of about nine feet above the ground. This is shown by the use of mortar in the restored portion and by the inverted position of some of its decorations. The lower or ancient part is of dry stonework in receding embedded courses of very large blocks, and the līṅga is enshrined in a deep pit. The whole exterior is covered with a decoration representing in low relief, sometimes an arch, sometimes a dome. This is observable also in a large "bārav" now attached to a modern mosque east of the town of Pārner (which has probably usurped the site of a temple), and in the remains of a small temple between the town and river at Palshi (20 miles north of Pārner) in the same talukā. The roof has been destroyed, but a few fragments of cornice seem to indicate that it was Dravidian in style; like that of Malai Devi at Nighoj, 10 miles south-west of Pārner. The pillars of this temple closely resemble the two shown in the front of the temple figured in Plate I. of the Archæological Report for 1874. The Nandi in front of the principal entrance now rests at the bottom of a pit lined with modern masonry, and partly covered by a rough dome constructed of the debris of the porch, and perhaps of a destroyed pavilion. On this rests a stone representing apparently an inverted bunch of grapes, which the people call a līṅga, but do not worship; probably it was a finial of the pavilion or of one of the porches. Several slender pillars of a broken square section have been built into a small modern temple in the middle of the place, which is, however, chiefly now admired as possessing a relief, in moulded clay coloured and gilt, of Chāṇḍikā Devi in strife with the buffalo demon, the work of a local artist, a pāṭil of the village of Renavādi. Under a pīpal tree before this temple are several fragments of sculpture, among which are a huge gargoyle in the form of a monster's head, and a great stone rānjana, or vase, the superior and inferior portions of which have been hewn separately and afterwards fitted together. It is of the still popular form of an egg truncated at both ends, and is $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet both in height and in external diameter. It is very rough; its simple ornamentation does not correspond with that of any of the other remains; and it might have been made at any period by the stone-cutters who hew out oil-presses. (Ind. Ant. V. 12). (Surveyed.)

III

The old temple of Nāganātha Mahādēva to the east of the Nagar gate has also a bārav or well.

Inscription —In the bārav, at the Nāganātha temple is an inscription in Devanāgarī dated Saka 1015

III ŚRIGONDA TĀLUKA

III

1. Śrigonda, 20 miles W N W from Karjat and 32 miles south from Ahmadnagar

(1) Temple of Vithobā of Hemādpanṭi masonry, 2 cellae of large blocks of stones without cement, in imbedded courses Mandapa of nine domes supported on six pillars, shrine—one dome, portico in front—one dome, shrine on a lower level than the mandapa There is an inscription on the door step in front of the temple, but the steps appear to be modern Round the door of the shrine are two rows of figures The inner row represents female, and the outer one monks On the raised block forming the threshold of the shrine are carved two tigers heads, one on each side Projecting from the top of the entrance to the shrine and from the middle of the front of the mandapa are carved blocks resembling those in the temple of Lakṣmī Nārāyaṇa at Māndavgan The length of the mandapa is about 23 feet and width about 21 The pillars are similar to those of the temple of Lakṣmī Nārāyaṇa at Māndavgan Externally also the two temples are similar, but what carving there is on the latter gives the shrine the appearance of being built of a succession of pillars packed together, while in the former, being perfectly plain, this effect is not produced (2) Temple of Rakhmā adjoins the above and is in the same style but on a smaller scale both temples have a good deal of carving (3) Temple of Mahādeva Hatkesvara, the same as the above as to the number of domes A bijay in a pitlike shrine style plainer than any of the above The front of the mandapa is built up with bricks (4) Temple of Mahālalshmi, the same as the above as to number of domes The shrine has been built up, and parts of the mandapa also It is not used for worship and is in a horrible state of filth The work appears superior to that of the preceding two

Some very good wood carving decorates the façades of two houses at Śrigonda of the style, though not so old, that is found in such abundance in North Gujarat

III

2 Pedgaon 8 miles south of Śrigonda The village occupies a long strip of land which, with the river on the other side, forms an old Muslim fortified enclosure which is roughly a quarter of a mile square, and is now almost completely overrun by prickly pear, which, in most parts, grows so thick and so high as to hide from view the ruins it so jealously guards The fort is said to have been built by Khān Jalān in 1675, when it was called Bahādurgad The Muhammadan buildings, which, judging from the great amount of debris must have been very extensive, have almost entirely disappeared the most complete being the Bibi Mahāl, occupying a delightful position upon the ramparts overlooking the river There is also a nal for bringing water from the Bhuī to the village The water was raised from the river by an elephant not still in existence The nal seems to be in good repair outside But, although nearly three times the size of the Muhammadan remains, and despite the devastating work of the spoiler's hand, there still remain, within the precincts of the fort, the ruins of five old Hemādipanti temples, one of which, that of Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa, is a perfect little gem. It is most profusely decorated both within and without, and its outer walls are thickly covered with figure sculpture. It has, though in less degree than some of the others, suffered severely from the hand of man. It is a Vaiṣṇava temple facing west, built on a high part of the bank overlooking the river, and whose spire, now absent, was, like many of this class, probably constructed in brickwork. The basement mouldings are studded with little figures of horses, elephants, and men, and a very rarely occurring moulding is here found, viz., the aśvathara or horse moulding. The walls above the basement, the pillars, and door frames are richly wrought, the pillars being of rather a different type from those generally met with. (Surveyed.)

III. The other temples are those of Bāleśvara, Rāmeśvara, Kholeśvara, and Bhīra-vānātha's, originally a Jain temple. The shrines of Bāleśvara and Kholeśvara are sadly ruined and dismantled, the shrine only in each case standing, while the halls are but heaps of ruins. Pedgāon must have been a place of importance long before the advent of the Muhammadans and perhaps, owing to its position upon the Bhīmā, it may have been a centre of special sanctity. At this point the Sarasvati river runs into the Bhīmā, and it is upon the bank of the former that Śrīgonda stands.

III. 3. Līmpāgaon.—At the village of Līmpāgaon, five miles south-west from Śrīgonda, is the large, plain, but substantially built temple of Siddheśvara. On either side of the main porch is a large perforated screen wall, neatly designed in imitation of cross bars, and slightly decorated. The building looks heavy and massive, and the pillars of the hall are very well proportioned. The temple is, in every respect, a much better one than any of those at Śrīgonda and is better built. It is in use. (Surveyed.)

III. 4. Kothāl, 10 miles north of Śrīgonda. Temple of Khandobā on the top of hill the roof supported by six pillars in octagonal and square sections. The date is unknown, but there is an inscription on an old temple behind the principal one which might be made out. The temple has been struck by lightning, which has left the marks of its course, but has not injured the building materially. In front of the temple is a place where the Bīlī says he used to see people swung round on a pole by a rope with a hook on Mārgaśīrṣa, Suddha 6th and Pāuṣa Suddha 6th.

III. 5. Belvandi Kothār, 4 miles north of Śrīgonda—Hemādipanti barav or well quite perfect. A Hemādipanti temple projects into the barav on one side. There are two doors to the mantapa and one to the shrine, all uncarved; also a dome over the hall, in front of the door. Above this dome is a place for raising water to the top, and a stone water-way running the length of the temple on the roof, and emptying into an old water trough. The shrine is on the same level as the mantapa, and has a linga in it; no carving. The barav is not used, as it is supposed to be haunted, a man having been drowned in it once. There is a good deal of mud in it.

III.

6. Kolgaon, 12 miles north-west of Srigonda. Hemādipanti temple of Vālukeśvara Mahādeva, with nine domes; linga in a sunk shrine; pillars much carved, with figures on the capitals, but they are all covered with chunām. Two recesses, naved, one on each side of the mandapa. In front of door the remains of a verandah built of large blocks of stones let into each other in receding courses. A new shrine with a linga on the left of the verandah. In front of the verandah, a Nandi under a dome supported by four pillars. Over the shrine of the temple is a brick and chunam dome in the usual style. In front of the temple a brick dīpandla with staircase inside. The original outside of the temple has evidently been removed and replaced by modern masonry.

7. Ma'ndavgan Katra'ba'd, 20 miles north of Srigonda. Temple of Dēvi, formerly of Lakshmi-Nārāyana; mandapa of nine plain domes, supported by four pillars and eight pilasters. The pillars are in square, octagon, and round sections; on their capitals are various figures, with cohras on the brackets of the pilasters. The shrino is a sunken one with an image of Dēvi; also a large mutilated one of Lakshmi-Nārāyana about 5 feet high. The mandapa has three entrances, and the shrinē door and main door of the mandapa are well carved. In front is a pavilion on 4 pillars. The outside has not much carving except string courses of lozongo ornament. The outline is broken by a succession of right angles. The mandapa is 24 feet square inside.

III.

8. About 4 or 5 miles south-west of Māndavgan, on the northern slope of the hills, there is a curious old tank attributed to the Gavali Rājās, and another somewhat similar on the east side of the road, from Pissorekhand to Māndavgan, a mile or two from the former place.

III.

9. Devalgaon, 8 miles north from Srigonda. An old Hemādipanti well, which has been repaired in later times and the old stones broken up, so as to make them manageable, by the modern Wadars.

IV.—KARJAT TALUKA.

III

1. Karjat, 42 miles S.S.E. from Ahmadnagar:—(1) Temple Mallikārjuna (Naktiṣe dēval) with nine domes and the shrine, the centro dome being cut smooth. The pillars are a good deal cut. The door is opposite the shrinē, and on each side of the mandapa are shrines containing images. In the main shrine, which is on a slightly lower level than the mandapa, is a linga. In the wall on each side of the door are a good many carved figures, principally obscene. In front of the door is a bull under a dome, and on the left-hand side of the door is a detached shrine with a linga. (2) Temple of Mahādeva, adjoining the above has 9 domes to the mandapa, and a linga in a pit-like shrine. There is no carving about it. (3) The temple of Nāgeśvara, across the stream, has a shrine whose floor is six feet below the floor of the hall, and is approached by a flight of steps leading down to it from inside the shrine doorway. The antechamber to the shrine is about two feet lower than the hall floor. The temples, though old, are of no particular merit. (Surveyor)

III.

2. Takli, 6 miles north of Karjat. Temple of Khandeśvara Mahādeva (Hemādipanti) in ruins. The stones are said to have been taken to build the fort at Parainda (?) between Bārsi and Karmāla.

- III. 3. Rehekuri, 6 miles north-west from Karjat. Temple of Komañña Mahādeva has 12 domes to the maṇḍapa, one to the shrine, and one door, under which is a hull, beside which is a colura on a detached stone. It is surrounded by a wall which is capped with big stones.
- III. 4. Koregaon, 2 miles east of Karjat. (1) West of the village is an old Hemādpanṭi temple of 9 domes to the maṇḍapa; linga in the shrine. (2) Temple of Koreśvara Mahādeva, old, said to be a Hemādpanṭi temple. The shrine only is left. In it are a linga, Nandi and figures of Gaṇapati and Pārvatī, all in white marble. The piṇḍi of the linga is composed of four faces of Mahādeva adorned with snakes, and there is a snake on the narrow part of the śālunkā. One Bāhurāv Gōviad Vakil is said to have brought these figures to Karajāla from Hindusthān about 100 or 150 years ago; and they were brought from Karmāla by Rājaji Lakshman, father of the present Kulkarni of Koregaon.
- III. 5. Ra'ssin, 10 miles south-west from Karjat. (1) Hemādpanṭi temple of Mahādeva (Kāledēval): nine domes to the maṇḍapa, one dome to the shrine, and one dome to porch. The pillars are a good deal carved. In the centre of each dome is a carved stone, something like a star; figures on the capitals of the pillars. Three shrines; the main one opposite the door, and one on each side of the maṇḍapa. The main shrine is a pit with a linga in it. A stone platform runs round the temple, about the level of the floor. (2) Temple of Dēvi, said to have been built, with two or three other temples here, by a Vānia about 100 years ago. On the site of the present temple there is said to have been an old brick one 200 or 300 years old, the brick dīpamālas and well attached to which still remain. One of the dīpamālas has a stair inside, and a man at the top can make it oscillate perceptibly. It is 43 feet high, and 22 feet in circumference at the top. The well is of brick, where devotees bathe and make the water most filthy.
- III. 6. Garav Pimpri, 8 miles north from Karjat. Temple of Pimpresvara Mahādeva, nine domes to the maṇḍapa; and a linga in a pit-like shrine. The work is all plain; an extra pillar, put in to support one of the stone cross-beams which is cracked, has an inscription on it. There is also an inscription under the door of the compound. There is a ruined temple of Rāmēśvara Mahādeva in the village (apparently modern) with a ruined barav and drinking-trough attached to it.
- III. 7. Kokangaon, 1½ miles north of Karjat. Hemādpanṭi temple and well, both in ruins. Of the temple nothing is left but the shrine. The villagers say the stones were taken for the forts at Nagar, Paranda, and Karmāla, and for the Nimbalkar's Vāḍā at Mirajgaon.

V.—JĀMKHED TALUKA.

- III. 1. Arangaon, 10 miles west of Jāmkhed. Hemādpanṭi temple of Araneśvara Mahādeva, rather larger than usual, but plain. An inscription.
- III. 2. Jāmkhed, 45 miles south-east from Ahmadnagar (18° 13'; 75° 22'). (1) Hemādpanṭi temple of Mallikārjuna Mahādeva. The shrine only left, the pillars of the maṇḍapa lie about. (2) Hemādpanṭi temple of Jataśankara Mahādeva was long buried under the earth and is in good preservation; it resembles the one at Arangaon.

- III. 3. Telangsi, 11 miles east from Jāmkhêd. Hēmādpanti temple of Jāṭāsankara Mahādeva; nine domes to the maṇḍapa; cobra in pit-like shrine. Cobras on capitals of pillars: no carving. Not far off is a Hēmādpanti bārav. Four stairs descend from the middle of the four sides. Between the stairs in the wall are niches. The bārav is broken at one corner.
- III. 4. Śirur, 24 miles north of Jāmkhêd. Temple of Siddheśvara Mahādeva; nine domes; cobras on the capitals of the pillars. Shrine opposite the door. The front (on both sides of the door) and the entrance to the shrine are nicely carved. There is also a shrine on the left side of the maṇḍapa. In front of the door is a single dome with a Nandi. Roof of temple modern, of chunam.
- III. 5. Bhaṭgaon, 26 miles north by east of Jāmkhêd and 3 miles north-east from Śirur. Temple of Bhāleśvara Mahādeva; 9 domes on fairly carved pillars with lozenge shaped ornaments on the faces. One shrine in ruins, another has a maṇḍapa.

VI.—SHEVAGĀON TALUKĀ.

- III. Ghotan, 6 miles north-east of Shovagāon. In the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society for January, 1850, in a paper by the Rev. Dr. Wilson, is mention of temples at Ghotan and Miri. In quoting Dr. Gibson's account, he writes: "I may mention, of those I have seen, a temple at Miri below the Diwar Ghāt on the road from Ahmadnagar to Paithan, and a similar one at Bāmini and a third near Kopargāon." The temple at Ghotan, seen by Dr. Gibson, is now so masked by modern walls and other improvements (?) in chunam and whitewash that little can be seen of the original temple. What little is seen, however, shows that the building is of a very old type, perhaps older than the general run of so-called Hēmādpanti temples. In and near the village are two other old temples, both more or less in ruins. (Surveyed)

VII.—NEVĀSA TALUKĀ.

- III. 1. Miri, 18 miles south by east from Nevāsa. At Miri there is a Hēmādpanti well, possibly the one mentioned by Dr. Gibson as being on the road to Paithan. It is now in a very ruinous condition, the whole of the four sides leaning dangerously inwards and ready, at the least further subsidence of any part, to be precipitated bodily into the pit. Notwithstanding the danger, the well is still in use, and the villagers descend to its lowest depths, whence escape would be impossible, with little concern for their own safety. There is also a much older step-well cut in the rock, a short distance south-west from the village, lately unearthed. It is now partly full of water, but the Jāghirdār of Miri says that, when the water was lower, he saw an inscription below with a Jaina figure near it. Dr. Wilson mentions in his paper, quoted from above, several Buddhist temples, but this is a mistake, for, so far as is now known, there is not a structural Buddhist temple in Western India left standing, those so called by him being Jaina. (Surveyed)
- III. 2. Tekā, 5 miles north-east of Nevāsa on the Godhvani, is an old sacred place with some interesting temples.

III Ba'mini 6 miles east of Rahuri, a large square Homâdpanti tank partly in ruins (Surveyed)

II 6 1 Kokamthan, about 5 miles down the river from Koprigion Upon what appears to be an artificial embankment, projecting out into the stream, and upon the north-east outskirts of the village, is an exceedingly interesting old temple It consists of the usual shrine and mandapa, and seems, originally, to have had three porches, one of which, that on the east, has been afterwards converted into a side shrine The general plan of both shrine and mandapa is star shaped, the numerous corners, which always give such a pretty effect to these buildings, being the corners of superimposed squares upon a common centre Curious additions to the three outer walls of the shrine are half silharas, each with its own walls and basement mouldings Each of these looks like half a small temple, which has been cut down the middle, and stuck on to each of the three middle projecting faces of the shrine From external appearances one would be led to think each of these additions contained a small shrine or cell off the main shrine, but this is not the case The lower portion of the temple, i.e. between the cornices and the ground, has been built of stone, while the upper part, or silharas of the shrine and mandapa, is built of brick The whole has been plastered, and the ornament and figures, first finished in stone, have been reproduced in the plaster which overlies them On the brickwork the whole of the decoration is in plaster The brickwork seems to be original, and it was probably with the object of having the lower part of the building in keeping with the plastered silharas that that part of the work was also plastered The temple at present contains in the small side shrine, a shapeless stone, bedaubed with red paint, which the villagers call Jagadambadevi, and which now appears to be the principal object of worship In the main shrine is the usual linga, but set up behind it on end is Vishnu on Sesha (Ind Ant V 5) (Survived)

III 2 Kopargao 60 miles north of Ahmednagar on the Godavari Temples of Salve-svara and Kalesvara, repaired by the Peshwa's Government the temple of Vishnu was built by one of the Peshwas (Ind Ant V 1) .

III. Kumbhar, about 6 miles up stream from Kopargau Has a temple which is much plainer and more massive looking than that at Kolamthan. At present it contains the linga. The main shrine holds an asana or throne, no ornamental figure on which is worshipped as Lakshmi (Ind Ant V 6) (Surveyed)

III Kasre.—Here is an ugly mean temple of Bhairava built a tall. It has Henalanti foundations, probably one of the oldest pieces of built stone work in the district as the ground plan, a rectangular man laya with a shrine forming a very slightly broken square, is exceed ugly archaic.

111 Puntambe, on the Gouvari, 12 miles south east from Kopargan, has numerous temples, mostly recent one of them is to Chingaleswari, a famous saint said to have had 1,100 disciples, the temple is said to belong to the middle of the 17th century. There are also temples here of Kalyanaswami Jagadamb, Balajihadhi Bhairava Puntambhadevi, Keshavayagi, Gopala Krishna, Vishala, Anantima, Bhadrakali, and, Tyagarajadevi.

Rāmeśvara, Mahārudraśankara; also a ghāt built by Abotābāi of Indore, and another by Shivarāma Dimal.

X.—SANGAMNER TĀLUKĀ.

Sangamner—Two sets of copper-plates were obtained here in December 1891. One, in Sanskrit, is dated śakasamvat 922, and records a grant made by the Mahāsāmantabhīllana of the Yādava of Senundeśa. These plates are in the possession of Ganpat Sing valad Nārāyan Sing Patevāla. (Epig. Ind. Vol. II., Part XII., p. 212.) The other grant was in Persian and does not appear to be of any great age. (Other Persian inscriptions, Ind. Ant. IV. 319.)

XI.—AKOLĀ TĀLUKĀ.

II 6.

1. Akolā.—Situated to the east of the town, some little distance above the bank of the Pravara river, is the old temple of Siddheśvara. A short account of it is given in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, No. XIII. Vol. III. January 1850, and a more detailed one in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. V. p. 8; but in neither of these accounts, which describe temples in the neighbourhood, is mention made of the fine old temples at Ratanvādi and Tāhākari, twenty and eight miles west and north-west respectively from Akolā. In the above accounts the temple of Siddheśvara is said to have been buried for a considerable period. If buried it must have been with the accumulation of earth washed down from the hillocks which overtop it on the south. Its basement is even now partly buried, the earth being deeper on the side of the hillocks, there being some four feet on that side and two feet on the side nearest the river. Owing to the elevation of the temple above the river and its distance from it, it seems impossible for it to have been covered up with silt from the latter.

The plan of the temple is peculiar, inasmuch that it has a porch and doorway opening into the back of the shrine in addition to the usual door between the mandapa and the shrine. This is very unusual. It occurs also in the temple at Ratanvādi, and there is a small ruined temple at Sinnar, which seems also to have had the same back door arrangement. The general plan consists of a mandapa with three porches, and the shrine with its antechamber on one side and porch upon the other. The temple, as regards decoration, is comparatively plain, but the few hands of ornament that are used are sparingly and tastefully applied. The whole of the roofing of the temple is comparatively new from the beams upwards, excepting the ceiling of the eastern porch, which is original. The west porch, before the main entrance, has been entirely rebuilt, and when these repairs were carried out, the walls were "pointed" with chunam, the raw white lines of which being no improvement upon the general appearance of the interior. The shrine doorways, which are both alike, are fairly well carved, and Ganapati presides above them. The entrance doorway has, with its porch, been entirely rebuilt, the side jambs and threshold of the original being included in the new work. Upon the outside of the shrine, on the north and south, is a niche containing figures of Kālīkā Mātā and the Tāṇḍava, respectively.

In the account of the temple given in the J. B. B. R. A. S., Dr. Gibson is quoted as having said, "On the side of one of the verandah pillars is a long inscription in the Sanskrit character. I regret I had not time to copy it:" and in the Indian Antiquary

- II. 4. Ekdare, 15 miles north-west from Akolā, two caves in Mahākālī hill, apparently of no particular interest.
- II. 5. Kothulmkuñji, 16 miles south-west from Akolā: the ruins of the temple of Nārāyaṇeśvara, with a fine doorway; foundations of the temple of Kṛṣṇeśvara.
- I α. 6. Harischandragad, with a group of late Brahmanical caves. A little below the row of caves is a large Hemādpanthi dhāra or reservoir, with steps, along the southern side of which is a row of little niches or shrines, some still occupied by images. This is surrounded by small temples and thadagi or tombs. Below the reservoir is a small temple in a pit, half cave half building, consisting merely of a cell with a shrine at each side, one of which contains the socket of a departed liṅga. Below it again is a deep hollow or pit, formed by cutting away the rock at the head of a ravine, so as to leave a small level space, in the centre of which rises a structural temple with a central spire. It has a very ancient appearance, probably contributed to by the tremendous rainfall of these highlands, but it is also remarkable for its plan. There is no maṇḍapa; the shrine is under the tall spire, which is of the Northern form, and the liṅga within is worshipped from any one of four doors with porches. Another shrine containing the image of some goddess is half built, half hewn, in the south-east corner of the pit, and the western side is occupied by caves used as dharmasālās, two or three in number, for they are much mixed up together. (Survoyod)

About 50 yards down the ravine is the best cave in the place, a great cistern about forty feet square, the centre of which is occupied by a huge liṅga surrounded by four pillars,—something resembling in pattern those of the chief cave at Elephanta, but much more slender. The worshippers swim and wade round this, splashing it. There is a good relief to the left, and a small chamber above the water. (Ind. Ant. V. 10; Arch. Surv. Report, Vol. V.; Cave Temples of India.)

VII.—KARMĀLA, TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Karmaḷa, 11 miles north from Jeur station :—a large temple of Ambāhāt.
III. 2. Warkut: a half built, but old, temple with 21 sculptured slabs in excellent preservation arranged along the wall.

AKALKOT STATE.

- III. 1. Akalkot, 23 miles south-east from Sholapur. Outside the Maindurgi gate and adjoining the Sukhibansi is a small but chaste mosque attributed to the times of the Dakhan kings. It has but one arch and two low minarets, and much plain but delicate stone work.
III. 2. Jelaer, 8 miles south-east of Akalkot, near the railway;—(1) a mosque with some simple decoration said to have been built by one Farās Khān, Vazīr to some king; (2) the temple of Māruti at the gate is Hemādpanṭi; the pillars in the mandapa run parallel to the front, and form a portico; (3) a small temple of Śeṣhaśāyī in the court of Kāśilinga Mahādeva's has some figure carving about it. There is a fine well in the same court.
III. 3. Mangrul, 14 miles south-west of Akalkot, and 3 miles south-west of Karabgaon station;—shrine of Pir Shekh Bābā; and at its south-west corner is a tomb, built "by a Vazīr," with a good deal of plain decoration. It stands on a platform raised some 10 feet from the ground on arches.
4. At a villago south from Karabgaon are some very old Kanarese inscriptions.
III. 5. Chapalgaon, 6 miles north of Akalkot. A Hemādpanṭi temple of Mallikārjuna Mahādeva, cruciform in shape or with three shrines, and about 60 feet long. The front is covered with carved figures, and the roof supported by columns.

I—NASIK TALLA

Nasik is situated in the upper valley of the Godavari river, and is four miles off the railway leading from Bombay to Calcutta. The town is a place of great antiquity and sanctity, being associated with the legend of Rāma who is said to have spent part of his exile at Panchavati, a suburb of Nāsik on the north side of the Godavari or Ganga river. It is to a large extent a Brāhmanical town, and may be regarded as the Benares of Western India. It is mentioned under its present name by Ptolemy, and, situated as it is just above one of the few easily accessible passes up the Ghāts, and in the middle of a fertile plain interspersed with isolated hills, it must always have been a place of note. Nasik has now a large number of temples but mostly dating from last century and not remarkable for their architectural beauty. No very accurate or detailed information as to their history or dimensions has been obtained as yet. The principal are — (1) Temple of Sri Rāma, in Pañchavati, said to have been built by Rangarāy Odbekar about 1782. It is a large stone temple with a handsome dome and stands in the middle of a court with a nagārkhāna over the entrance. (2) Temple of Rāmēśvara Mahādēva, in Pañchavati, built about 1754 by Nārośankar Rajēśhādar, a noted chief under the Peshvā Bāliji Bājirāv (1740-1762). (3) Temple of Kapāleshvara, in Pañchavati, said to be the oldest here (Jour Bom B R As Soc Vol III Pt II p 87). (4) Temple of Sundara Nārāyaṇa on the Nasik bank of the river, is dedicated to Lakṣmi Nārāyaṇa. It is uncertain when it was erected, some say about 1749. It enjoys a large mand managed by the pūjāris. Opposite to it is the Rāmakunda or Astivlaya Tīrtha. (5) The Sita Gupphā or Cave of Sītā. (6) Temple of Venkatesa, or Bāliji as it is commonly known, a pretty large building, enjoys a yāghr worth Rs 20 000. (7) The temple of Gov. Rā is close to the river, and is a śaiva temple. (8) Temple of Muralidhara, with an image exactly like that of Śrī Śrī Muralidhara at Poona. (9) Temple of Bhadrakali. (10) Bhatyāras Matha built by an ancestor of the Vinchurkar. (11) Palaces of the Peshvā and Nārośankar. Besides which there are many others, besides ghāts, &c

1 a 2 Pandu Lena or Trirasmi 5 miles south from Nashik. A well known series of Banddha caves with many inscriptions of the Andhra, Ksatrapa, and other kings. They are situated in one of three isolated hills, called in the inscriptions Trirasmi, close to the Bombay road. They were first described by Captain James Delamane who visited them in 1823, and afterwards by Dr T Wilson and Mr West. The caves are 17 in number, and though small, are a very interesting group. For further description see Cave Temples of India and Ind Ant XII. 139 for inscriptions. (J B B R. A S, Pt XIII p 65, XVI 30, XVII 37 Archaeol Survej Report Vol IV. (Surveyed))

III 3 Trimbak 20 miles west from Nasik Temple of Trimbakēśvara or Tryambakēśvara built by Sadāśivārāyaṇa alias Bhāu Saheb, about 1750, has a Government endowment of Rs. 12,000 per annum, under the charge of the pujaris (Jour Bom B R As Soc, Vol III Pt. II p 86) There is also a temple built by Ahalyabai of Indor in 1779, and five others There is however, close to the east wall of the enclosure outside, a small plain Hemadpanti shrine now of little account, but which probably was part of an older temple that existed before the present one was built

4. Anjaneri or Anjani-giri, 14 miles west of Nāsik on the Trimbak Road, is a small village, on the lower slopes of the hill upon which is, or was, a fort of the same name. Just below the village, in the plain, scattered over an area of about half a square mile, have been innumerable small shrines, sixteen of which now stand in whole or in part, while the rest are represented by the mounds where they stood, upon many of which lie heaps of their material—columns, figures, beams, and carved blocks. The most striking feature about all these is the small scale upon which they have been built, and they are all independent shrines and not satellites to a larger one. They all appear to rest upon brick foundations. They have been dedicated to various deities, the more important ones being Jaina; two are Vaishnava, while the rest are Śaivite. They face all directions of the compass. They are not used, nor do they seem ever to have been much used. The shattered condition they are now in seems to point to wanton destruction by the hand of man, but trees, cactus hushes and other plants grow most luxuriantly upon them. Beside the temples there appear to have been extensive masonry tanks, none of which, beyond their pits, and a few bits of stone-work, remain. There is one group of Jaina shrines, which on account of their better preservation than the rest, and the presence in one of a very finely engraved and important inscription, might be considered the principal group. Dated inscriptions upon temples are so very few and rare that when they are found they are of the utmost importance in fixing a style of architecture definitely, and giving a fixed point around which to group its variations. The inscription at Anjaneri records that in Sakasamvat 1063 Seunachandra III. gave three shops in the city (probably Anjaneri) for maintaining the temple of Chandraprabha, and that a rich merchant named Vatsaraja, with two others, Lāhada and Daśaratha, gave a shop and house for the same purpose. (Ind. Ant. XII. 126; J. B. B. R. A. S., Pt. XIII. p. 86.) (Surveyed)

- III. Upon the very highest plateau of Anjaneri hill is a small roughly built temple dedicated to Śiva built up of material from an older and better built temple. In the upper cliff, below the topmost plateau, to the north-east, just above the pond and bungalows, is a small roughly cut Jaina cave with a roughly cut seated Jina within. A small doorway, with coarsely cut figures on either side, gives access to a long verandah room off which, again, is the shrine. In the lower cliff, in the side of the gorge through which the rough ascent passes, is another small Jaina cave with better finished sculpture than in the one above. Pārasamātha flanks the doorways. These belong to the Digambara Jains, whose images are always nude. Attached to the cave is a water cistern. (Surveyed.)

- III. 5 Chama'r Tenkdi, a hill about 600 feet high, 5 or 6 miles north from the base of the hill, and face about S.S.W. The upper part of the ascent, 450 feet of roughly dressed stone, containing 173 steps of varying heights, and with a parapet on each side. At the 163rd step a path leads to two rock-cut tanks on the right, one having the top broken in and the other with two square openings. Above the tanks, the stair is continued by 16 more steps, cut in the scarp, landing on the terrace. The excavations, beginning from the left or west, are:—(1) In a slight recess is a tank with the two openings broken into one. (2) A cave, the verandah of which has four columns; the left one and left pilaster are left square in the rough, the others plain octagons. On the rock over the cave is built a lotus-bud cupola like those on structural temples. In the left end of the verandah is a covered cell; in the back, at the left side, a door has been begun but not cut through the wall; next to it is a plain rectangular window; the central doorway is plain with a raised sill, and has Tirthankaras or dvarapālas by the sides of it; Gautama, on the left, is 5' 2" high and is attended by two female figures about 3½ feet high. Over the door is a Jina seated cross-legged, about 14' high on a throne with three lions on the front of it, with a male chauri bearer 21" high on each side. To the left of this is a fat figure seated on a kneeling elephant; and to the right, a female (Ambikā) is also squatted on some couching animal, and holding a child on her knee. Pārśvanātha stands on the right of the door with the five-hooded snake canoping his head. On his right a female attendant, about 3' high, has a single nāga hood over her head; and to his right a male kneels on one knee. To the right of this is another window, and then a side door leading into a rough part of the cave walled off from the rest. In the right end of the verandah is an unfinished cell with a bench, and over the door a sculpture, very like that over the central door but somewhat larger. All the sculpture, however, being in a very coarse spongy rock, is rough and seems to have been touched up at a comparatively late date. The interior is but roughly hewn and not properly squared. At the left end is a group of figures in a slight recess and consisting of,—a Tirthankara seated cross-legged, 10' high, on a cushion on a throne bearing the bull, the chinha of Ādinātha, in the centre; to its left a squatted figure, and then two standing males, 5' high,—the other side below is unfinished. Outside each of the Jina's arms is another, similarly seated, 5' high; and over each of the three heads is a painted canopy with a male figure 3½ high on the central one, and a similar one on each side of him. Around this group are 21 shallow recesses 1½ each square, each containing a seated Jina: five down each side, three sloping upwards on each side towards one in the centre at the top of all, one under each of the lowest on the slopes and in line with the upper ones in the sides and one over each shoulder of the larger figure; these make in all the 24 Tirthankaras or Jinas. A bench goes round three sides of the cave. On the back wall, above the bench, is a group of figures: in the centre is a seated Pārśvanātha, 3' 2" high, on a throne with three lions below; his head is canopied by a seven-hooded snake. Above is a small seated figure and on each side a standing figure 2' 9" high with high cap and chauri. On each side of this is a large seated figure with high ornamental cap, necklaces, earrings: the left one is a male on a kneeling elephant with foliage below; the right one is Ambikā on a crouching lion or tiger and at her knee is a reclining female figure. Beyond each of these is a seated male 3' 5" high, similar to the central figure and with similar standing males at each side, but also with a triple umbrella upheld by Vidyādhara over the seven-hooded snake. The right group has Gautama standing under foliage and with no other canopy. To the extreme right is part of a standing male figure and of others unfinished. (3) About ten yards to the right is a recess as if for the beginning of a cave, and seven yards farther is the third excavation, with an open verandah. On the left wall is a figure 2' high, squatted on an animal, with a canopy above and pilasters down each side of the compartment. On the right wall, in a similar recess, is Ambikā on her tiger with a child on her left knee and a standing figure 1 foot high below her right knee and behind the tiger; figures also stand by the pilasters and appear in the canopy overhead. In the back of the verandah is an ornamental central doorway with raised sill having two griffins or lions' heads in front; an ornamental pilaster is on each side, and a cornice over the lintel with small standing males above over each pilaster and the centre of the door. To the left of the door is Pārśvanātha Śeṣhaṇṇi, with two smaller attendants, and an ornamontal piloster down each side of the panel, on which are carved some small standing figures. On the right side of the door is Gautama but much defaced, with decayed seated attendants below on each side, and several small figures on the side pilasters. The hall is 8 or 9 feet square. On the left wall is a group, containing two seated Jinas, 10" high, on a cushion with two lions below each; right and left of them are Ambikā and Indra with attendants. To the left of each Jina is a standing male. The canopies and 21 very small seated Jinas are nearly the same as before. By the sides of the central figures are three males in a row with triple chhatris over their heads very rudely cut. The back wall has a built bench in front and 8 male figures standing, the central one 3' 5" and the side ones 3' 3" high with four ornamental pilasters between and at the sides of the compartments they occupy; and at the base of each pilaster is a standing Jina. Overhead is scroll work and figures. The base of each pilaster contains a small standing male, with his arms down and the capital a very small squatting Jina. Beyond the outer pilasters are other standing figures 15" high. To the left of this group is another squatting figure 14" high with clasped hands and a large back knot of hair. On each side of each of the three large male figures in the lower corners are very small kneeling female figures with large back knots of hair. On the right wall are two small seated Jinas and to the right is Ambikādevī, 12" high, on her vahana, with a child on her left knee and the stem of a tree (mango) behind and above her head with a bunch of fruit hanging on each side, and a small seated male above. (4) About 10 feet to the right is a recess 15 feet wide and 7' deep. In the centre of the back wall, in high relief, is the upper part of an unfinished gigantic seated Pārsannātha, 7' from the top of the head to the waist and with a polyccephalous snake canoping his head. Just to the right of this the rock is undercut and on the top of the projecting part are three half lotuses carved on the level surface. The middle one 4' 6" in diameter and the side ones half the size and 5' from centre to centre. A square socket for a flagstaff is sunk in the centre of each lotus, and two raised pādūls or footprints are sculptured on the flat centre of the middle lotus. A recess has been commenced just to the right of these and over the top of the stair. All the carving is of a very inferior character. (Surveyed)

II.—IGATPURI TALUKA.

III

1. Tringalvadi.—Six miles from Igatpuri, under the hill fort of the same name, is the little village of Tringalvadi. Not far from it, situated in the foot of the hill side, is a Jaina cave which, though now very much the worse for the weathering it has passed through, was once a very fine cave. It consists of a large hall about 35 feet square, off the back of which is an antechamber and shrine, and before which is a long verandah the length of the width of the hall. Along the front of the verandah is a low parapet wall from which rise two pillars, one on either side of the entrance, supporting the outer cave of the verandah. Opposite these two pillars are two pilasters, and between the latter is the main doorway to the hall. On either side of these pilasters, between them and the ends of the verandah and piercing the partition wall between the verandah and the hall, is a barred window neatly decorated. In the centre of the verandah eading before the doorway is a group cut in relief representing five human figures in a circle. The middle figure appears to be assisted (or carried through the air) by one on either side, while two others help beneath. Over the doorway, on the dedicatory block, is a Jina.

Within, the hall ceiling is, or was, supported by four columns set square in the centre. The walls and ceilings are plain. Only one pillar now remains intact, the others being more or less destroyed. Round the two sides in the south-west and north-east corners are high benches (not altars). The shrine doorway is much corroded too, but was not so elaborate as the hall doorway. Above it, one above the other on three bands of mouldings, are three Jinas. Within the shrine, which is quite plain, and measures 13 feet by 12 feet, upon an altar against the back wall, are the remains of a colossal Jina. The chest, head, and umbrella have been smashed and thrown away, but the legs and cushion are left. In the middle of the cushion is the bull, shewing the figure to have been that of Rishabhadeva, while on either side of it is an inscription dated Samvat 1266 (A.N. 1210).

There was a very fine inscription upon the wall in the north end of the cave, only a very small fragment of which now remains. The rest has flaked off. The letters were small and well cut, the inscribed panel measuring, perhaps, four to five feet across, the depth being uncertain. The front of the cave, with the main doorway, was originally painted, traces of which still remain. The partition wall between the verandah and the hall has been entirely built of great irregular masses well fitted together. (Snrvoyed.)

- II. 2. Met Chandra'chi, with three caves, much filled in.
3. Nirpan, copper-plate grant, Ind. Ant. IX. 123:

III.—SINNAR TALUKA.

1. Sinnar, twenty miles south of Nāsik. Here there is the largest and most complete Hemādanti temple in the Dakhan—the temple of Gondeśvara, or, as it is sometimes erroneously called, Govindēśvara. There is also on the north-west a very interesting and exquisitely carved little temple in the Chalukyan style. (an oval Prabhavali of the style that is almost exclusively confined to the Kānarese districts, is the most north yet found.)

- I b. (1). The temple of Gondeśvara is a Śaivite shrine, surrounded by four other smaller shrines, and known as a Śrīpanchayatana temple. All these five shrines, with the Nandi pavilion before the main entrance, stand upon a raised platform, and the whole is surrounded by a masonry wall with two entrances, one on the south and the other on the east. The main temple faces east, and, with the exception of the crowning members of the śīla, which have been rebuilt in a very barbarous fashion,* it is practically complete in all its parts. It is however a great deal shattered, more especially the three porches. It is built of the ordinary amygdaloidal trap rock of the locality, and this has not weathered well, the surface having become more or less honeycombed, and the smaller carving has consequently suffered much on this account. The temple and its minor shrines are sculptured with decorative ornament from ground line to śīla. Of figure sculpture there is very little, and in this respect it forms a strong contrast with the smaller but richly carved temple of Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa at Pdgāon. They are each good specimens of the two styles of decoration—the one adorned chiefly with band- and panels of arabesque and other ornament, the other mainly covered with figure sculpture which forms the chief decoration. Figure sculpture enters more largely into the decoration of the pillars, and in this they are more like those of the Pdgāon temple.

2. Dubera, 6 miles south-south-west from Sinnar. Krishnarāy Gopal Barve, Jāgirdār, possesses a set of 8 copperplates.

3. Bhojapur, 10 miles south of Sinnar, temple of Khandohā cut in the rock in the hill fort.

IV.—NIPHAD TALUKA.

1. Nandur, 20 miles east from Nāsik at the junction of the Kadva and Godāyari. Temple of Madhyamēśvara Mahādēva, on a small rocky islet; said to be about 200 years old.

2. - Shivrā, 3 miles south-east of Niphād, a group of memorial stones, but of little interest and of comparatively no antiquity.

V.—CHANDOR TALUKA.

1. Chandor.—Here there are the temple of Renukā Devī, a Jaina cave, some inscriptions, and a gallery of caves away up in Indrāi Fort adjoining.

III. (1) The temple of Renukā is a comparatively modern construction of no particular architectural interest, save that it has a fine broad flight of steps leading up to it, and which appears to be its chief feature. At the foot of this flight of stairs are offerings in the shape of from twenty to thirty miniature flights of stairs (five steps in each) carved on small squared blocks of stones. Pilgrims bring these and leave them there. But the most interesting things at this temple are two images in wood lying in the inner courtyard of the temple and much bedaubed with red paint. They have been exceedingly well carved, but are much weather-worn. They are both Roman Catholic images—one representing the Annunciation and the other St. Anna with the infant Virgin on her knee. In the first, the Virgin Mary stands upon the crescent moon with a crown upon her head, and is robed in flowing garments, while all around her, forming an oval frame about her person, is a garland of flowers. The first image is a bas-relief, whereas the second is a statuette, both of wood. When or how they were brought here no one seems to know. They have now the names of Hindu goddesses and serve as such.

III. (2) The Jaina Cave which is excavated in one of the lower cliffs of the Chandor Fort-hill, just above the town to the east, is a roughly cut small room, entered by a doorway, and supported within by two central, heavy, and clumsily cut square columns. Around the four sides of the cave in bas-relief are scores of figures, large and small, mostly images of the Āṭhankaras. On the back or west wall is the principal figure, that of Chandraprabhā, with the crescent moon beneath him. This was originally the principal object of worship in the cave. Upon the south wall of the cave are figures of Gaṇapati and a four-armed devī which are red-leaded and worshipped, the latter as Kālīkā Mātā, after whom the cave is now called.

III. (3) In the top of Indrāi Fort, above the upper cliffs, towards the north end, and facing east, is a row of thirteen caves varying from 12 to 20 feet square. They are in a continuous row, only separated from each other by thin partition walls. There is nothing about these caves to indicate to what religion they were dedicated, whether they were excavated to afford shelter to a garrison in ancient days. Near the top of the steps leading up the cliff is a large Persian inscription. (Surveyed)

2. Dhodambe, curious old temple of Mahādēva with carved figures.

VI.—YEOLĀ TĀLUKĀ.

- IIa. Anka'i, 6 miles south from Manmād station. Above the village are 7 or 8 Jaina caves of some interest, though small; the carved doorways are specially rich. In the fort of Ankāi are some Brahmanical caves of late date, and in the sister fort of Tanhāi are some old temples (see Archæological Survey Reports, Vol. V.; B. R. R. A. S. Pt. XIII. p. 69; Cave Temples of India). (Survoyed)

Inscription in old Dovanāgarī on a pilaster in the Jaina caves.

VII.—NĀNDGĀON TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Bargaon, 6 miles south of Nāndgāon. An old Hemādpanti temple of Banēśvara, but of no particular account. (Survoyed)
- III. 2. Na'gapur, 12 miles west by south from Nāndgāon and 2½ miles east of Manmād. Old Hemādpanti temple of no special interest. (Survoyed)

VIII.—MĀLEGAON TĀLUKĀ.

- IIb. 1. Jhodga', 15 miles north-east of Mālegaon. At Jhodga' is the well finished temple of Mānikēśvara situated at the foot of a small hill to the west of the town. It consists of a central hall with its porch and three shrines, and the main śikhara is practically complete. The whole is richly wrought and decorated, and the temple looks exceedingly well as it stands in the open without any surroundings. The main shrine, hall and porch are of original construction, the two side shrines are of later and inferior workmanship, the older work. The interior of the temple is comparatively simple and running round the walls is whose mouths an arch of little figures. The ceiling covers in the mandapa without any intermediate free-standing pillars. In the middle of the floor of the shrine, which is rather lower than that of the hall, is a linga, while in the back-wall is a large empty niche. The shrine door is fairly well, but a trifle coarsely carved. Out in front of the porch, upon a roughly raised platform, is a large mutilated Nandi looking towards the shrine. Upon one of the pillars, inserted in the entrance under a broken beam, is a short inscription of a few letters only. About a hundred yards west of this temple are the ruined shrine and antechamber of a smaller temple of much plainer design. (Survoyed)
- III. 2. Chikhalvohol, 10 miles north-east of Mālegaon. At Chikhalvohol there are the remains of an old temple. Little of the original work, however, now remains, and the temple consists principally of mud.

IX.—BĪOLAN TĀLUKĀ.

- III. Devalāna, 9 miles east by north of Satāna. Here there is an old three-shrined temple dedicated to Jageśvara, but the three shrines have been rebuilt in a very plain manner. A few courses of the basement of the original building remain below the later work, and show that that part, like the porch, was originally highly carved. The porch is elaborately decorated though much damaged. Within, it has a central panel to a ceiling representing Kṛṣṇa and the gopis, similar to the ceiling at Vāghli. (Survoyed)

X.—KALYAN TALUKĀ.

III. 1. Saptasringa, in the Chāndod range of hills, with masonry tanks, and the temple of Siddhēśvara, now mostly in ruins, but with the dome standing, and having some rather elaborate stone carving. It was built of large blocks of stone without mortar. Near a dharmasālā stands the samādhi or tomb of a Rājā of Dharmapur. Near by is a fine old basti. The cavo of Dēvi Mahishamardani or Saptasringa Nivāsini is at the base of a perpendicular scarp near the summit of the hill (Ind. Ant. Vol. II. pp. 161-164).

III. 2. Dhodap..... Hill fort with an inscription on the gate.

XI.—DINDORI TALUKĀ.

III. 1. Barmasej, 6 miles north from Nāsik. A hill fort in which is a large well with a flight of steps descending into it. There is also said to be an underground passage leading from it.

III. 2. Jambatke, 4 miles south-west from Dindori. A plain Hemādpanṭi well, 45 feet square.

III. 3. Ambegaon, 13 miles west from Dindori. Hemādpanṭi temple of Mahādēva, 40 feet by 36,—the roof and portions of the walls fallen, but richly covered with sculptures.

III. 4. Vani, 12 miles north from Dindori and 26 miles from Nāsik. A plain temple of Mahādēva, partially ruined. Copperplate grant, Ind. Ant. XI. 156.

III. 5. Chandikapur, 15 miles north from Dindori. The ascent to Saptasringi. Inscription, stating that the steps were made by Konhar Girmāji, Krishna Girmāji, and Rudrāji Girmāji in Śaka 1692.

I—DHULIA TALUKA

- III 1 Amboda, 12 miles from Dhulia A small temple said to be Hemadpanti of the 17th century
- III 2 Lalung* 7 miles south of Dhulia At Lalung there is a small Hemadpanti temple on the south of the village by the roadside, but it is of no interest Above the village rises the old fort, the extent of which is very limited Within the walls, which are now partly in ruins, are a few large rock cut water cisterns, and on the highest point is a ruined European bungalow built, report says, by a former Collector, as a hot weather retreat from Dhulia A few old iron guns lie about, and two or three with their benches knoed off have been used as a waste water pipe to one of the bath rooms of the bungalow
- III 3 Vinchar Bk, 14 miles from Dhulia Well, said to have been built during the times of the Gavalî Rujâs
- III 4 Nandala, 20 miles from Dhulia Temple of Mahadeva
- III 5 Dhadre 14 miles from Dhulia Hemadpanti temple of Mahadeva
- III 6 Sirud, 14 miles south east of Dhulia Hemadpanti temple of Devi and a well

II—PIMPALNER TALUKA

- 1 Pimpalner, copper plate grant Ind Ant IX 293

2 Balsane a small village, some twenty five miles to the north west of Dhulia, where there are the remains of some nine separate temples and buildings—three in a field belonging to Lakshman Gangadhar just above the bank of the Buru river on the south east of the village, four on high ground to the east of the village, one a malha, a short distance to the north east of the last, and a small one in the fields, across the river, some distance to the south of the village Of these the finest examples are one in the first group and one in the second The former is now the most complete and highly wrought of all at Balsane, though judging from the amount of work lavished upon the great fallen blocks of the other temples, they were not much behind it if at all It is a Saiva temple, with three shrines arranged around a central hall, and having a porch upon the fourth side, the west which is the front of the temple It is now very much shattered and weather worn Portions of the sikhara of the main (east) and south shrines remain, but the north shrine, with its sikhara has almost entirely fallen and these parts of it still standing threaten to topple over with the least shake The exterior walls of the temple are much in the style of the temple of Lakshmi Nârâyana at Pedgôn in the Ahmadnagar District The lower basement mouldings are highly decorated while above them rises the main section of the walls covered with figure sculpture of gods and goddesses dancing figures, jooris &c while above all the sikharas rose, thickly adorned with delicate ornamental detail. The interior of the building is in no wise behind its exterior in the matter of decoration, its pillars, ceilings, shrine and entrance doorways being very richly wrought.

IIb

The second temple mentioned above has been no less highly finished than the first, but the whole of its shrine has fallen. Its plan differs from the first in that it had but one shrine and three porches in place of the three shrines and one porch. The interior of this temple is in a very dirty state, and, as no worship is carried on within it, it is entirely neglected. The figure sculpture, which is thick upon its exterior, is almost completely ruined, either by vandals or by both them and the weather. The stone being of rather a soft nature seems to have weathered to the condition of marum and now crumbles away with the least touch. The broken walls of the fallen shrine give a good idea of how the structure was built up. Here we find an outer and an inner face of block masonry, set up more or less on edge, not bedded on the broad or flat sides of the blocks, and the interior space between them filled up with huge rough blocks thrown in in no particular order, and without the very least attempt anywhere at bonding. In fact the outer shells just keep the inner "filling in" from rolling out altogether, and the shells themselves are only prevented from bulging out and falling asunder by the weight of the blocks. Here and there, more especially at the corners, a clamp or two of iron is used, but very seldom.

IIc

Among the other temples at Bal aus, the one on the south east of this list, with a single entrance and many small shrines within, is in a very ~~filthy~~ state. This is due to the front having been built up with brick and mud masonry at some time, ~~keeping out light and air~~ ^{مسدود} The bats have taken possession of the interior, and the village ~~could~~ ^{could} find it a very comfortable retreat from the hot rays of a midday sun. Upon the matha is a Sanskrit inscription dated Salva 1100

3 Bhamer, 1 m south of Nizampur. This seems once to have been a large place, the whole area being covered with ruins. On the west is a gate flanked by round towers, with two pillars about 9 feet high for gate posts. There is also a finer gateway in better preservation, near which is a characteristic Hemadpanti or Gwalior style well. The fort on the hill above the village contains many rooms excavated in the rock. The caves of most importance face the south west and are nearly all on the same level. The first group consists of three openings into each other, the roof of the central and largest room is supported by pillars. On the face of the hill facing Nizampur is a range of caves said to be inaccessible (Int. Ant., Vol. II p 128 Vol. IV p 339) (Surveyed)

III

1 Nizampur, 17 miles north east from Pimpalner. A Juna temple dedicated to Purnanatha

In addition to the above there are numberless fragments of ruins apparently of the same class of building as the Hemadpanti temples scattered about in many of the villages, which lie at the foot of the hills south of the Panjra in the Pimpalner taluka. These fragments are generally single pillars curiously carved, evidently very old and often built into other buildings. The most conspicuous is in a village south of Pimpalner.

* The temples are now being repaired where necessary and cleared out

- III. about 5 miles from it. There is also a Hemadpanthi tank at the village of Indwa, 6 miles north-west of Dusa, but it is of no account.

III.—NANDURBÂR TÂLUKÂ.

- III. 1. Nandurbâr, 19 miles north from Nizampur, contains many mosques. The house of the Sir Desai is said to be about 400 years old.

Inscription in Persian on a ruined tower.

2. Narayanpur, 5 miles west of Nandurbâr. An old fort close to a stone dam on the Siranad river, and a little way up the stream are fragments of a curiously carved temple built into a well, and others lying near.

- III. 3. Watada, 5 miles east from Nandurbâr. Old and large temple of Vithoba

2. Karda copper-plate grant Ins. Ant. XII. 263.

V.—SHÂHÂDA TÂLUKÂ.

- III. 1. Prakasha on the Tâpti, 10 miles south-west from Shâhâda. A number of temples and tombs built on rocks, some five of them, viz the temples of Gautama, Sangam-êśvara Mahâdêva, Kedârêśvara, Manâpuri, and a temple of Mahâdêva, are fine handsome imposing buildings, but they are all more or less modern and of little interest. (Surveyed)

Inscriptions.—Two Sanskrit inscriptions over the door of the temple of Sangam-êśvara Mahâdêva, one in a large sâbhâ mandapa, and one partially effaced on the south side of the gate of Mahâdêva's temple

- III. 2. Taula, 2 miles north of Sultânpur. There is here an old step-well built in the Muhammadan style. It first descends a certain distance, then turns at right angles and continues down to the main shaft. Cross beams at the different levels, supported upon the plasters in the walls, divide the depth into storeys, increasing in number as the passage descends. There are no free-standing pillars. (Surveyed)

VI.—SINDHEDA TÂLUKÂ

- III. Darna, 3 miles south of Chumtânâ. About two miles south-east of Chumtânâ, and on the east of the main road are the ruins of an old Hemadpanthi temple, standing upon rocky ground in the midst of the fields. (Surveyed)

II a Thalner, 10 miles from Shurpur Ten Muhammadan tombs, of which eight are built with dressed black stone and two of burnt brick. One is octagonal with carved black stones and the others square and plain. Parts of the domes are destroyed but they are in good condition inside. Three of them are occasionally used by Europeans on tour. The largest three are 11 feet square each. The octagonal one is 10 feet wide. Two are 5 feet square, one 6, two are 4 feet square and one 3½ feet square.

Inscriptions.—On the octagonal tomb are some Arabic inscriptions but they yield no date. The Musalmāns of the place say they were built about 500 years ago by one Shāh Ajam Mule Shārām, whom they call their Pir, and whose tomb is the 6 feet square one. One inscription reads —

III 1 Parola, 22 miles east of Dhulia. Imam Bādhāh's dirgāh on the east of the fort, chattri of Gurdhar Seth Bāli; Valuk, Sūmā temple about 24 feet square of stone, with brick spire ornamented in plaster, and temple of Japātā Bhāva about 58 feet by 50

III 2 Undikheda, 3 miles south west of Pārolā Large temple of Śrī Nāgesvara Mahadeva on an island in the Bori river The outer walls of the spire have many angles and are carved it is ascribed to Trimbakrī Māmī Pethe. It is, however, modern and of no particular interest

III. 1 Chopada, 21 miles north-west from Amalner Jama Masjid said to have been built by Miran Muhammad Khan, one of the Farukhi Kings, Kali Masjid, and other mosques; Sitkothad well 37 feet square

III 2 Ada'vad, 10 miles east of Chopada A fine old well 30 feet by 12, with steps, but ruined and a masjed

Inscription.—On one of the stones at the steps of a well at the mosque is a short Persian inscription.

- III 3 Unabdeva, 3 miles north of Adyar. A hot spring with some buildings.
- III 4 Changaon, a fort north-west of Chopda, supposed to be 500 years old. It is estimated to have cost Rs. 2,00,000 and its dimensions are 500 long and 500 broad. It is situated about a mile and a half to the north of the village on the top of rising ground in Survey No. 168. The platform of the fort is reached by steps in the fort of Lalang in Dhulia taluka. There are tanks on the side, as in Lalang. Some of them are of carved stones. Inside the gate of the fort is a pir's tomb and a tank. The remains of a wall are visible. The fort is said to have been built in the Gwalior Raj.
- III 5 La'sar, north-west of Chopda, a temple of Nagesvara, said to be 300 years old. It is estimated to have cost Rs. 2,000, and its dimensions are 16' long and 33' broad. It is situated in the hills to the north of La'sar, and is surrounded by a wall on the outside, on one of the wells inside the temple is an inscription.

X—ERANDOL TALUKA.

- II 6 1 Erandol. In the middle of the town is a large strongly built old quadrangle known as the Pandav's Adi. It is the remains of one of those strongly built and enclosed mosques which were erected in the early days of Muhammadan rule, partly mosque partly fort, and is of the same style of building that the great Adina Masjid at Anhilwada must have been. Lak', the greater part of the mosque at the west end of the court seems to have been the remains of older Hindu temple. The court yard and the mosque is enclosed by a high strongly built black stone wall, with high arched recesses all around the inner side, in each of which is a barred or grated window. There appears to have been a fine porch before the entrance to the court yard on the east, but it is now represented by a huge pile of fallen masonry over which the visitor has to climb to reach the interior. The mosque which is usual, occupied the whole width of the west end of the enclosure, has almost entirely disappeared the central bay only remains, and this has been enclosed by mud walls and is still in use as a mosque. Of the rest, all, except a few solitary blocks has disappeared, leaving some beautifully carved mehrab's in the back wall which are partly buried in accumulated debris.

The Hindus claim the place as a Hindu building subsequently appropriated by the Muhammadans. But this is not quite correct. The building as it now stands is purely Muhammadan, but, as just said it has in great part been built as all the earlier mosques were of plundered material. Judging from the few columns that now remain, the whole of the pillars of the mosque were probably taken from some Hindu temple or temples, and where the court yard wall is broken down in places, carved stones and broken images may be seen built into the interior. The beautiful mehrab's, with their Persian inscriptions above them, now much obliterated, are purely Musalman work. A Hindu temple possibly once existed here, and perhaps on the site of the mosque—nothing more probable—but the Hindus have now not the shadow of a claim to the place. (Surveyed.)

- III 2 Pharkande 6 miles from Erandol, southwards along the Anyani nadi, has a masjid about 100 years old built by a man named Chand Mowin. The building is distinguished by two minarets, which are said to sympathize so that if you ascend and shake the one, the other also shakes. The building has also fine chnnam work, but is not otherwise remarkable.

- III. 3. Mukhpāt is a village 3 miles south-east of Erandol. To its south-east is an irregular plateau, on which is a tank named Padmālaya.

On the bank of the tank are temples of Mahādeva, Māruti and Gaṇapati. Inscription.

XI.—NASIRĀBĀD TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Kanaḍa, to the north-west of Nasirābād. There is a quaint-looking temple of carved black stone, below the village on the banks of the Gīrṇā. Close to it is the house of the gosāvi; in the middle of it is a flight of steps leading to a door beyond which are more steps and then a big hole, climbing through which we enter a small cell about 5 feet by 10; from this a door leads to a second 7 feet by 4; beyond it is a third measuring 4 feet by 3½, and then a fourth 3½ feet by 3. There is nothing remarkable about them, however, as they are dug out of the clay.

- III. 2. Selgaon, north of Jalgaon. A maṣka or monastery said to have been built by Maṣangir Gosāvi about 200 years ago. It stands on high ground near the junction of the Tāpti and Wāghar-rivers opposite Borawal, is built of stone and lime, and is about 80 feet long, 60 wide and 30 high. The east wall is falling. The temple is approached by steps.

- III. 3. Kanda'ri, south of Jalgaon. Temple of Mahādeva of small dimensions, said to be in the Hemādṣanti style and going to decay. (५५५)

- III. 4. Palasade, north-west from Jalgaon. ~~ماہادی~~ ^{Maḥādī} of Rāmeśvara built on a raised podium (ḍāḍ) upon a small hill near the junction of the Gīrṇā with the Tāpti. The temple is about 17 feet long, 14 wide, 21 high, and is said to be 300 years old.

XII.—SĀRDA TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Rasulpur, 2 miles from Rāver. An old fort and palace.
- III. 2. Bhokaridigar, on the Bhākar river, west from Rāver. Temple of Omkāreśvara, and a dharmaśālā said to have been built by Ahalyābāi Hoḷkar.

Enscription on the temple reads:—

चरणरज बिठल बहाल दाले गीजे धानेली परगणे राजापुर ताहुके विजयदुर्गकर निरंतर ११९९.

- III. 3. Paḷ, on the Suki nāḷā, north of Rāver. A mosque of black stone, with three bays, and of considerable architectural merit.
- III. 4. Maṇapuri, north-west of Yāval. About a mile from the village is an old temple ascribed to the Gavali Rājās.

- III. 5. Kalmadu, north-east of Nhāvi. Well, supposed to be 400 years old, in a ruined state, situated on the old high road from Chopda to Burhānpur, and said to have been built by a Gavali Rājā. The Nimbālkar carried off some of the stones of this well to repair his fort at Yāval about 80 years ago. Since then it has fallen out of repair and dried up.

XIV.—JAMNER TALUKA.

- III. 1. Khatgaon, 3 miles north of Jamner. At Khatgaon there are the ruins of an old temple, now of no account.
- III. 2. Garkhed, north of Jamner. There are the ruins of what was once a very fine temple of the best style of work. Portions only of the plinth and walls of the back of the shrine now remain, showing the mouldings of the basement, and portions of the richly carved wall above it. For the rest, the addition of mud walls has preserved the place as the habitation of the god now worshipped. (Surveyed)
- III. 3. Shendurni, a small ruined temple of Viśveśvara or Viśdevāli. It has an inscription, which probably covered about 3 feet by 2 feet of wall surface on the outer wall on the south side, but now too much defaced to make anything of (Surveyed.)

XV.—PACHORA TALUKA.

- II b. 1. Sangamesvara, 4 miles east of Kajgaon Station. On the south side of the village, and near the junction of the two streams, perched upon the high bank, is the old temple of Malādeva. The temple consists of the usual shrine, a hall whose roof has disappeared, and a very prolonged porch. The exterior of the temple is perfectly devoid of figure sculpture, its place being taken by three bands of geometric ornament. These are exceedingly chaste and effective, and run round, in unbroken lines, the three sides of the exterior walls of the hall and shrine. The ceiling of the antechamber is peculiar in that the mouldings assume an oval in plan, a very unusual shape for a ceiling. In the shrine is the linga, and the temple would seem to have been originally dedicated to Śiva. (Surveyed)
- III. 2. Pimpalgaon Budrak, 6 miles south-east of Warkhed. At the village of Pimpalgaon is the temple of Hari-Hareśvara standing in the junction of the Bāvulā and Dabā streams, about 1 mile south of the village. It faces the west. Though originally an old temple it has been almost entirely rebuilt with brick, rubble, and plaster masonry, and is now of no account architecturally. (Surveyed)
- III. 3. Kurhad Khurd, 7 miles from the Maji Station. The temple at Kurhad Khurd is small and in ruins, and is of no particular interest. The shrine walls and part of the west walls of the hall remain. (Surveyed)
- III. 4. Lohara.—The remains of an old temple, with very plainly moulded walls, on the Sonri stream, about a mile south of the village, called Tiptavara. (Surveyed)
- III. 5. Nandre, near Maji, a plain old step-well of not much interest. It is square in plan and devoid of all the ornamental adjuncts which are generally found about these wells. (Surveyed)

XVI.—CHĀLISGAON TĀLUKĀ.

1. Pātan is the site of a deserted town, now overgrown with jungle, in the hills to the south, or, more correctly, south-south-west of Chālisgaon. Scattered among the ruins are the remains of several old temples. The hills here are recessed, forming a horse-shoe-shaped valley, the two horns of the former, which project northwards, being about a mile apart at their ends, while the glen between them runs back about a mile and a half. At the upper end of the valley, above the temple of Āi Bhavāni, on the east side, a mountain path winds up the lonely glen, the Pitalkhorn, in which are situated the well known Pitalkhora caves. A stream, fed by the numerous mountain torrents from the hills around, winds down the Pātan valley, and in one of its curves sweeps by the foot of the shrine of Āi Bhavāni, at which there is still kept up a yearly jatrá or fair. The stream inclines, throughout its meanderings, towards the eastern hills, leaving a considerable area between it and the western cliffs in which, high up above, are the caves known as Nāgārjuna's kotri, Sita's Nhāni, and Sringār Chāvadi, a space ample enough for the old town of Pātan whose ruins now occupy this ground. The whole of the valley is thickly wooded, being quite uninhabited, save by the owl, the jackal, the wild pig, the panther, and an occasional tiger. The ruins of the old town are thickly scattered about, and with difficulty maintain their ground against the encroachments of the jungle, which, when unable to displace them, just grows over them and casts its creeper entanglements firmly around their mouldering walls.

Beyond the few ruined temples, tanks, and wells, there is now nothing above ground to represent the more ancient city. The ruins that now exist, composed of mud and rubble stone walls and Musalmān graves, are of a comparatively recent town, and that a town of no great size. It appears to have been walled in with strong high mud walls and high bastions, within which was a citadel similarly fortified. The crumbling walls of these enclosures, with the foundations of mud and rubble built houses, still exist. One of the walls runs along east and west by the side of the principal temple, that of Maheśvarn, and is built on to it on either side, thus making the temple itself, which is upon high ground, part of the wall, the north face being within, while the south face is without, the fort. Opposite this on the south, and separated from it by a broad passage, is another small fortified enclosure in which is a small ruined temple with an inscription over its doorway. Beside these there are two other small ruined shrines which, like them, have been included in the fort wall on its east side. These are a few hundred yards to the east and north-east, respectively, of the first temple, one being Brahmanical, while the other is Jaina. With the temple of Āi Bhavāni up the glen, these are all the remains above ground of the more ancient city of Pātan. (Surveyed)

- 1 a. (1). The temple of Maheśvara, the largest and most important, is built on the usual plan of shrine, mandapa, and porch, and faces east. Its śikhara, or tower, has gone. The exterior of the temple is profusely sculptured, and the pillars and doorway of the shrine have also been well chiselled. In the shrine, in the middle of the floor, is the linga, while in the middle of the back wall is a niche to hold a figure, with an ornamental frame around it. There are several figures lying about which may originally have been placed in the various niches among which are Śiva, Pārvatī, Lakṣmī-Nārāyaṇ, Sūrya, &c. The most important thing, however, in the temple is a very fine and well preserved inscription slab built flush into the south wall of the antechamber before the shrine, and midway between the floor and the beam. The slab which bears a Sanskrit inscription, has been slightly corroded on the left hand side by the action of rain water. It is an inscription of Govana III of the Nikumbhavamsa and records the grant of a village named Devasangama at the consecration of the temple of Śiva (Madanadahana) which was built or perhaps commenced by his father Indrarāja in Śaka 1075 or A D 1153-54 (Epig Ind Vol I Part VII p 338)

III (2) The temple on the south of this one, in the other enclosure, which is now in ruins seems to have been part of the belongings of this larger temple. Its axis, passing through the entrance doorway and the doorway of its enclosure, passes through the centre of the shrine of the large temple, and this smaller temple faces the larger. Its interior is much like the interior of the hall on the south side of the enclosure round the temple of Gondeśvara at Sinnar. It has no cell shrine, the interior being a long plain hall. It was probably a matha or rest house attached to the large temple. Over its entrance doorway is a much worn and damaged inscription just as occurs over the door of the matha at Balsane.

III (3) Straight in front of the large temple, at short distance from it, is the small ruined Brahminical shrine already mentioned, facing north.

III (4) And in front of this (north) at about a hundred yards distant, is another small ruined shrine dedicated originally to a jina, having a seated jina over the entrance doorway and the empty throne well carved, in the shrine.

III (5) At the upper end of the glen, on the east side of the stream, is the insignificant temple of Āi Bhavani. Very little of the original building now remains in fact most of it is seen being rebuilt from the material of an older temple. From what little does remain the temple would appear to have been a cluster of small shrines with one or two small halls. At present the place is in a very ruinous and dirty condition. In the outside of the courtyard wall, built into the wall, is a much abraded inscription slab, but as this wall has been built partly of old temple materials the inscription may not be, and probably is not, in situ. It records the grant of land and money by Sonhadadeva to the college established for the study of the Siddhantasironmani and other works of the astronomer Bhāskarāchārya.

II a (6) Śringar Chavadi is the name applied to a cave about half a mile up the hill north west from the temple of Āi Bhavani on the way to the Kanbara fort. To the right of the entrance the excavation is continued forward at right angles with a low screen wall and pillars closing it in. This part is about 25 feet in length by 7½ deep while the principal hall of the cave is about 18 feet by 15. Outside is a rock cut enclosure.

II a (7) Nagarjuna is a third cave just above the village consisting of a palasid or verandah and an inner cave. It is a Jaina excavation and contains several figures of the Digambari sect.

III (8) Sitas Nhani, near the preceding is a Jain Brahminical excavation.

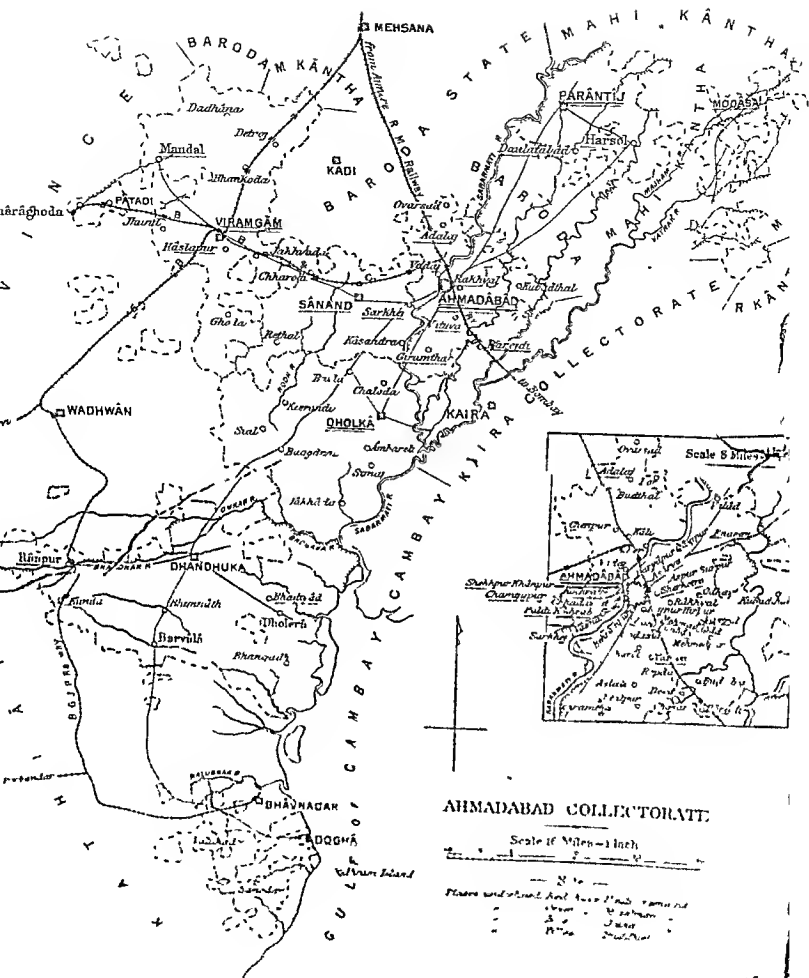

I, 2 Pitalkhora a glen not far from Pitan to the south east contains a ruined stupa and cella, very early Buddhist work, with some fragments of inscriptions in the Maurya character—probably dating two centuries before (J B B I S Part XVI Ind Soc Report, Vol IV and V Caves Temples & Inscriptions) (Surveyed)

II.

3. Vāghli, a village about seven miles to the north-east of Chālisgaon. The remains at Vāghli are the temple of Mudhāidevi, a mile to the south-west of the village, and the temple of Kṛishṇa in the village. The former is situated upon an artificial mound upon the bank of the river, and is now partly in ruins. Smaller shrines which surrounded it, and stood upon the margins of the platform, have disappeared save the ruins of one which stood on the south of the temple. Although passing now under the name of Mudhāidevi's temple, it would appear to have been originally dedicated to Sūrya, for, of the only three figures sculptured upon the walls of the shrine, the one upon the principal face, the west or back wall, is that of Sūrya with his seven horses. Lying within the temple, and also outside are large blocks, portions of the temple, upon which are carved full length figures of Sūrya, three on each. There are some very neat decorated ceilings in this temple. The śikhara or tower of the temple has disappeared.

III.
I b.

40. In the village is the temple of Kṛishṇa, which, as it now stands, is of no interest save for three very fine inscription slabs built into the inner wall of the hall. There is no separate shrine, and what little of the original temple now remains has been so encased in mud walls that not even its plan can be guessed at. One of the ceilings is sculptured in bold relief representing Kṛishṇa and the gopis. Within the hall on a raised platform is an arrangement made up with a brass mask, and which is now worshipped as Kṛishṇa. The inscription slabs are rather corroded, but all three belong to one inscription and record the erection of a temple of Siddheśanātha or Siddheśvara by Govindarāja with a well attached and a śālā or dispensary. The last few lines record a grant to this temple by Govindarāja and his superior, king Seuna, in Sambāt 991 (A.D. 1069). Seuna is the Devagurāja Seunachandra II. This temple was thus built some two hundred years before Hemaḍpant lived, who is the traditional founder of these temples. This inscription is also very important as it gives a dynasty of petty kings ruling for about four hundred years previously who are said to have come from Dwārka. The well mentioned in it still exists beside the temple, but there is no sign of the dispensary. (Epig. Ind. Vol. II, Part XII, page 221. (Surveyed))

II.—NORTHERN DIVISION.

I—AHMADĀBĀD ZILLA

I—DASKROI TĀLUKĀ *

1. The city of Ahmadābād lies along the east bank of the Sāharmatī river about 60 miles from its source. It is completely enclosed by high lofty walls which were first built by Sultān Ahmad in 1412, strengthened by Sultān Muhammad Bigarāh in 1436, and were finally restored in 1832. The western wall is in nearly a straight line from north to south, its bastions looking down upon the river. The continuation of the walls round the north, east, and south of the city forms an irregular fan-shaped enclosure. Situated in the middle of the western side of the city, with the city walls forming its western defence, is the square enclosure called the 'Bhadr' (Cir 1412). This was the citadel and contained the palaces of the Sultān and his nobles, and later the head-quarters of the Peshvā when the combined Marāthā forces held the city. The great bastion to the south-west corner of the 'Bhadr' is said to contain the foundation stone of the city.

The principal entrance to the Bhadr is on the east through a large massive gateway flanked and surmounted by bastions. To the south of this gateway, built on to it, and forming the south-east corner of the Bhadr, is Āzam Khān's palace, now used as public offices and one of the largest buildings in the city. About 500 yards in front of this gateway is the Tin Darwāja, or triple gateway, which spans the main street.

Between the Bhadr and the south-west corner of the city is another enclosure, now let for private use but originally the seat of the Gaikvād's Government when the Peshvā occupied the Bhadr. It is known as the Gaikvād's Haveli (Cir 1738).

The rest of the city traversed by a net-work of roads, streets, and lanes, remarkable for their narrowness and awkward turns, is thickly occupied and built upon. Amongst the dwellings and shops is a good sprinkling of mosques, tombs, and temples.

Although Ahmadābād takes its name from its reputed founder Ahmad Shah I., it was probably in existence as a city long before his time. Rājā Karan of the Solanki race of Anbilvāda, in his excursions against the predatory tribes of this part, is said to have built the town of Karnavati in the 11th century, which most probably was the town that Ahmad Shāh took possession of as his capital and adorned with many of its mosques and tombs. That this locality was an important one before the Muhammadan annexation is sufficiently attested by the many remains of Hindu architecture in the city and suburbs. All the pillars in Ahmad Shāh's mosque, the oldest in the city, are pillaged from a Hindu temple, and on one is an inscription in Devanāgarī dated Samvat 1307, which seems to have escaped the hands of the Moslem iconoclasts. Many Hindu images have been found and are still turning up. The well of Matā Bhavani to the north-east of the city is far older than the Muhammadan period, and in all probability served as a model for the far more advanced specimens of Dādā Harir's, Adāraj, and others through the province.

But whatever the city was before the Muhammadan period, its chief interest lies in these subsequent times. The greatest part of the architectural work of that time has been swept away and its material used to raise the mosques and tombs, walls and bastions of the conquerors.

Ahmad Khān, or Ahmad Shāh, was the grandson of Muzaffar Shāh, who from being viceroy of the province under the imperial court of Delhi assumed regal power. Ahmad Shāh is said to have founded the city of Ahmadābād on or near the site of the village of Asāval in A.D. 1412. During his reign were raised some of the finest buildings in the city,—his own mosque in the Bhadr; the Jumā mosque, the most extensive in the city; Rāni Sipri's mosque and tomb, the most complete in all its parts; Haibat Khān's mosque; Sayyid Ālam's mosque; the Tīn Dārwāja; Sidi Sayyid's mosque, in which are two specimens of about the best window tracery in Gujarāt, perhaps in India; and his own tomb and that of his queens. In the suburbs was constructed, during his reign, Malik Ālam's mosque, two miles to the south of the city.

Ahmad Shāh reigned until A.D. 1443, when he was succeeded by his son Muhammad Shāh, who reigned from A.D. 1443 to 1451. He does not appear to have done much to the city in his short reign, which was chiefly passed in foreign wars. In A.D. 1459 he was succeeded by his son Qutb Shāh. The mosque and tomb of Shēkh Ahmad Khuttu Ganj Baksh at Sarkej, with the adjoining tank, were completed during his reign. He built his own mosque in Mirzāpur during his father's lifetime. Kankaria's Tank was completed, Dhoryā Khān's tomb, and the Batwā and Usmānpur mosques were finished in his time.

Dying in 1459 A.D. he was followed in the kingdom by his younger brother, Mahmud Bigarāh, the most celebrated of the kings of Ahmadābād. His was a long reign from 1459 A.D. to 1511 A.D. "His personal strength, courage, and military skill are as conspicuous as his religious bigotry and his stern but far-sighted statesmanship. His love for architecture is attested by the cities of Mustāfābād and Mahmudābād, which he founded at Junāgaḍ and Champanir, and another Mahmudābād (or Mehmadābād) near Kheda, as also by the numerous and elaborate additions which his nobles, following his taste, made to Ahmadābād and its environs."

During his reign were built the mosque and tomb of Sayyid Usmān on the west bank of the Sābarmati, Miyan Khān Chisti's mosque, Muḥāfiz Khān's mosque, Achyut Bibi's mosque and tomb, Dastur Khān's mosque, Dādā Harir's well, and the Shāh Ālam group three miles to the south of the city. Mahmud Bigarāh was succeeded by his son Muzaffar II. (A.D. 1511—1526), and he by Bahādur Shāh, Mahmud II., Ahmad Shāh II., Muzaffar III., in order down to A.D. 1572, when Akbar marched into Gujarāt, captured Muzaffar, reduced the province, and left a governor to carry on its affairs.

"For about one hundred and fifty years subsequent to its invasion by Akbar, Gujarāt was governed by the viceroys of the emperors of Delhi, among whom were Shāh Jahān and Aurangzib before they themselves ascended the imperial throne. During the first half at least of this period, Ahmadābād appears to have been in the zenith of its prosperity. Under Muzaffar Shāh III., indeed almost the last, and not the least beautiful, of the stone mosques had been erected, and subsequent buildings are mostly in the planer and more massive style of the Pathans "

The Marathas appeared on the scene about the beginning of the eighteenth century. They carried their plundering raids into Gujarat, and the viceroys, at this time much enfeebled by the absence of aid from either Delhi or surrounding chiefs, could not cope with these new enemies and "in A.D. 1755 the Muhammadan power in Gujarat was finally extinguished, and the Marathas, though divided among themselves, took their place. They burnt and plundered the property of friend and foe with almost equal energy and spared neither mosque nor temple which it suited them to destroy. Innumerable were the architectural monuments which have thus suffered from their wantonness and malice, and the interesting ruins of which the very materials have been carried away for building purposes. Ahmadabad, in particular, felt so heavily the effects of their internal feuds and grinding rule, combined with the natural decay of the Muhammadan population, that its suburbs almost disappeared, large quarters within the walls became desolate, many splendid buildings were destroyed. Fortunately the tide of anarchy was arrested ere it had wrought even more disastrous results by the intervention of the British power "

An army under General Goddard advanced upon Ahmadabad "and on the 10th of February (1780 A.D.) displayed, for the first time, the British colours before the Moslem capital of Gujarat. The Maratha governor declining to surrender, a battery was opened on the 12th, and on the morning of the 15th a forlorn hope, followed by the Grenadiers of the Bombay division, rushed up the breach, which the garrison, after a determined stand, and when three hundred of their number had fallen, at length relinquished." Since then Ahmadabad has remained in the hands of the British.

Buildings in the City —

(1) The Mosque of Ahmed Shah (A.D. 1414) — In the south of the Bhadr or citadel is the oldest Muhammadan building in the city. Architecturally it is unique, the external screened stair and the ladies' gallery being the most curious mixture possible of Muslim and Hindu styles. The pillars throughout the mosque are taken from old Hindu temples, on one of them there is a Devanagari inscription dated Sambat 1307. The domes are richly carved. Over the principal mehrab is an Arabic inscription. The minarets were taken down eleven years ago being badly shaken and the stones were marked and laid on the roof, but no attempt has even been made to rebuild them. The mosque has been deserted and neglected for many years, and is now in possession of Government. No income or land is attached to it. (Ind Ant IV 239, 367)

(2) The Jamī Masjid (A.D. 1421) in a court 352 feet by 228 feet, the mosque itself being 210 feet by 95 feet and 19 feet high. Within it are 202 pillars and 76 pilasters supporting 15 domes arranged symmetrically, the centre three being somewhat larger and considerably higher than the others. The minarets once famous as "the shaking minarets of Ahmadabad," were thrown down by the earthquake of 1819. Mr Fergusson says, this mayid "though not remarkable for its size is one of the most beautiful mosques in the East." The niches or khlās are inlaid with coloured marbles. Until 1871-72 it was in charge of several people, including the Qāzi of Ahmadābād. Now it is in charge of the Collector and is managed by the City Magistrate.

- I b. (3) The Queen's or Rāni Rupwanti's Mosque in Mirzāpur quarter, near the travellers' bungalow, 105 feet by 46 feet and 32 feet high, consists of three domes standing on 12 pillars each with the central part so raised as to admit light to the interior. The minarets fell in 1819, but the bases of them are filled with exquisite patterns of tracery. In the adjoining tomb, which is in better style than Rāni Asni's, the large central and two side domes are adorned with some pretty carved work in geometric patterns and arabesque. It is in charge of the Mehellā Panch, and used by the Muhammadan butchers who live about the place.

- I b. (4) Rāni Sipri's or Rāni Asni's mosque and tomb (A.D. 1514) not far from the Āstodiā gate. The minarets of the mosque are 53 feet high and perhaps the most beautiful of their class. "Indeed that mosque is the most exquisite gem at Ahmadābād, both in plan and detail. It is without arches" (except a small one over a side doorway) "and every part is such as only a Hindu queen could order, and only Hindu artists could carve." The windows in the end are elaborately wrought, and the mehrdābs inside are of marble and carved with much care, though not so elaborately as in some other mosques. The walls of the tomb are filled with well carved lattico work and have been recently repaired. About a hundred yards north-west from this is a mound said to be the site of the Hindu village of Asāval, and where a mosque was built, but long since ruined. These buildings are in the charge of Sayyid Fāzalmīā Sayyid Muhammad alīas Sayyidmīā.

- II b. (5) Shāh Khupai, Shāh Khub-ki or Hazrat Shāhīn Shekh's Masjid (A.D. 1538) in Klās Bāzār, a small mosque in the city, with 32 pillars and two slender minarets; much in the style of the preceding, only inferior in details.

- I b. (6) Tin Darwāzā, a fine triple gateway in the middle of the city in front of the Bhadr, where was a large enclosure 1,600 feet by 800, into which it led. It is said to have been built by Ahmad I. The arches are 25 feet high, and the central one is 20 feet wide. The roof of the terrace on the top was removed in 1877.

- I a. (7) Āzam Khān's Palace (A.D. 1636) now used as public offices. An elegant dome crowns the entrance.

- I b. (8) Muhāfiz Khān's mosque in the north of the city, near Kutb Shāh's (No. 18), built by Jamālūd-din Muhāfiz Khān, Governor of Ahmadābād under Sultān Muhammad Bigarah (A.D. 1465), distinguished for the exquisite character of its details; its minarets, the lower portions of which are of pure Hindu architecture, have recently been taken down and rebuilt; above the roof they "are round towers slightly tapering, relieved by galleries displaying great richness in the brackets which support them as well as in the balustrades which protect them." The mehrdābs in this mosque are about the finest in Ahmadābād. They are minutely and elaborately carved (Fergusson, Ind. and East Arch., pp. 533-34). The rausa is a plain structure. There are ten tombs, only one of which is of marble. The mosque is in the custody of the Musalmān Panch.

- (9) Ahmad Shāh's tomb to the east of the Jami Masjid, a massive domed mausoleum with tracery windows of beautiful design, and with marble tombs inside, viz. of Ahmad Shāh, his son Muhammad Shāh, his grandsons Jalāl Khān, Kuthu'd-din Shāh, and Ahmad Shāh II. It is managed by a Muhammadan Panch. There is a langarkhānd or alms-house attached where cooked food is daily doled out to the poor. Government allow Rs. 2,601 a year. In the enclosure, among the many graves, is one containing some children of the late General Ballantyne.
- (10) Tombs of the queens of Ahmad Shāh in an adjoining enclosure surrounded by a screen of tracery of great variety of pattern. The marble tombs are elaborately wrought in bands of sculpture, and that of Murkbī Bibī is partly inlaid with black marble and mother-of-pearl. The principal tomb is known as Moghlāi Bibī's, in white marble with a Persian inscription round it.
- (11) Sidi Sayyid's Masjid (A.D. 1412) in the north-east of the Bhadr. and outside the Iāl Darwāzā, with two remarkably richly carved sandstone windows measuring 10 feet by 7 high (see Fergusson, I. and B. Arch., p. 533), is now used as the Māmlat-dār's office. One of these windows was slightly injured at the apex when taking down the platform which was put up by Mr. Purdon Clarke for the purpose of paper casts being taken about thirteen years ago. The damage has grown since. Mr. DeForest, an American gentleman, had facsimiles made of these windows in wood. One of them is now in the Indian Section of the South Kensington Museum, and the other is in New York.
- (12) Haihat Khān's Masjid in the south of the city near the Jamālpur gate, built of the pillars of Hindu temples, and one of the earliest examples here. The minarets are simply short thin cylinders. The porch on the east looks as if it were Hindu in its original position. The carvings are poor, and the floor of the mosque is of marble throughout. Haihat Khān was not buried here. His remains lie in a rauza outside the Kālpur Gate. The west or back wall of the mosque, which is faced with cut-stone and has handsome carved buttresses, is almost hidden from view by two huts. Haihat Khān was one of Sultān Ahmad Shāh's nobles.
- (13) Dastur Khān's Masjid in the southern part of the city close to Rānī Asōi's (No. 4), was built by one of the ministers of Mahmūd Bigarah (Cir. 1436 A.D.). It is a fine building, and is surrounded by a colonnade covered by small domes. The perforated screen enclosing a cloister round the courtyard is very varied and beautiful in design. To the south is a graveyard in which is the marble tomb of Dastur Khān, one of Sultān Muhammad Bigarah's ministers, on a raised masonry platform. Neither the masjid nor graveyard are kept in order.
- (14) Sayyid Alam or Sayyid A'alamu'd-din's Masjid in the north-west of the city, near Wajih'u'd-din's, built in the time of Ahmad Shāh, is an early and plain example of the Gujarāt Muhammadan style. The façade strikingly resembles that of Ahmad Shāh's mosque. The details inside are exceedingly rich. The inscription over the central mehrab bears the name of Sayyid A'alam Abu Bakr Hussaini as its builder and A. H. 915 (A.D. 1509) is stated as the year of construction.
- (15) The Shāhpūr or Qāzi Muhammad Chisti's Masjid built in 1565 by Sheikh Husain Muhammad Chishti, but never finished, is in the north of the city close to the Shāhpūr gate. The shafts of the minars are very ornamental—the tracery in the sides These rooms have been converted into small residences by the Muhammadan Panch with a view to raising an income and they have been let to low people, including Goanese cooks, who keep the place in a filthy condition.

I b. (20) Sakar Khān's Masjid is a very large stone building with 5 domes and *mehrab*s. It is next in size to the Jamī Masjid. The pillars in front are in threes and of Hindu type, the front is open in three sections, separated by short portions of solid walling. The end sections have three bays each separated by pillars, and the central section is of 9 spaces. The northern and southern wings have been converted into rooms by the spaces between the arches being filled up with brick and mud. Entrance to the mosque is now possible only by a side door, the original front door being inaccessible except through a very narrow alley. Sakar Khān's Rauza stands by itself in a small open space in Hajira pol. The domed roof stands on 32 pillars. Under the central dome are three tombs of marble close to one another in a line.

I b. (21) Phulī Masjid is between the Delhi and Daryāpur gates, near the city wall. This is a large stone mosque with 5 domes and *mehrab*s the central mehrab is of stone richly carved the others are very plain. The domes have small pendentives but are otherwise plain. The pillars have partly at least been reft from Hindu or Jain temples. The front is open and has 22 pillars. The end domes rise from the pilasters of the walls. It has two short slender minarets with very plain bases at the corners. There is a small rauza in front with Hindu pillars. The place is quite deserted and used only by weavers in the preparation of their webs. The original name of the mosque appears to have been, 'Fath'.

III (22) Shah Wajih u'd din's tomb built by Sayyid Murtaza Khān Bokhari (1606-9), in the west of the city, 160 yards north of the Bhadr and as far south of Sayyid Alam (No 14) with a lofty dome, and windows of delicate trellis work. It is said to have been built by Amir Sada't Khān in Akbars time, he also built a madrassa at the same place. The ghatari or wooden canopy was put up by Murtaza Khān about the same time. These buildings were completed in A.H. 1011 (A.D. 1602). Wajih u'd din died in A.H. 999 (A.D. 1590). Mr Hope gives a different account.

III (23) Darvish Ali's mosque between Pankora Naka and the Civil Hospital south of the Qazis mosque and of Pir Muhammad Shah's. The minarets are leaning away from the wall and in a very dangerous condition. The rauza is a very neat one the walls being filled with perforated stone work. To the east of it in the same enclosure, is Darvish Ali's tala or cistern of considerable size and depth, covered in by vaults and with various openings above by which to draw up the water. A stair leads down to platforms above the water.

III (24) Mahmūd Ghaus' mosque 300 yards south of the Queen's mosque in Sarangpur, "looks like a bad transcription of the Jaunpur mosques, and though not deficient in a certain amount of grandeur, is painfully wanting in elegance." It was built in 1562 and bears some resemblance to the Jaunpur mosques of the 16th century. It is also known as Dolat Khān's Masjid and Ek Todā Masjid. To the north is an open space with a rauza still standing which contains the remains of two sons and a wife of Mahmūd Ghaus. Mahmūd Ghaus himself died at Gwalior, where he lies buried. The main entrance to the mosque was formerly surmounted by two minarets connected with each other by a carved arch. One of the minarets gave way during the earthquake of 1818-19. The other was taken down by the Public Works Department as it was in a dangerous condition, and the façade was repaired.

- III. (25). The Qāzi's or Qhliotā Ldr's mosque on the Ghi Kāntha road, built by Qāzi Abu'l-Farah Khān in the reign of Aurangzib, is a small one of three bays and three aisles (4 pillars on the floor) and arched. It has one mehrab neatly carved. There is a raised niche in the south end and two in the north. The roof is flat. In front is a neat rauza of 9 small domes, and to the north-east is another rauza with a large dome enclosed by lattice-work screens. All are in a very dirty and dilapidated condition. The northern half of this mosque was pulled down some years ago by the late Qāzi Husainu'd-dīn of Ahmadābād. On the ground so cleared he set up a range of shops and small houses, the rents of which are enjoyed by his successor, but nothing from the income is applied to repairs. The entrance gate of elaborate workmanship is in complete ruin.
- III. (26). Svāmī Nārāyaṇa's temple (1850), with an octagonal dome supported by twelve pillars.
- III. (27). Mirā Masjid in Lunsavādā near Mirā chauri.
- III. (28). Abdur Razzak's Masjid, on the way from Dahlgarvādā to Popatiya road. A small stone mosque with marble flooring and of very plain architecture. The rauza is octagonal and domed, and the walls consist of perforated stone slabs all white-washed, Abdur Razzak lies within. A handsome wooden canopy covers it. Close by is an arched divānkhānā. The present holder derives an income of Rs. 200 to 250 per annum from the lands and houses belonging to the mosque.
- III. (29). Hozirā Masjid is Hazira's pol is Kālupur.
- III. (30). Ālam Khān's Rauza in Danapith. Ālam Khān was a Wazir of Sultan Ahmad Shāh's. The rauza, all of stone, with some pretensions to architecture, is in the grain market. It is full of rubbish and badly cared for by the faqirs in charge.
- III. (31). Hasti Bibi's tombs,—one of marble, the other of ordinary stone in Mānik Chauk in Rāni Hajira.
- III. (32). Rāni Hajira in Mānik Chauk.
- III. (33). Abdullah Shāh's Rauza in Mānik Chauk in Bādshāh Hajira.
- III. (34). Qutbu'd-din's Rauza in Danivādā in Jamālpur. The rauza belongs to the time of Ahmad Shāh. There are three tombs in it but the place is now used as a dwelling-house by a faqir.
- III. (35). Mukhtam Sāheb's Rauza and Masjid in Jamālpur near Dātā Pathar. The original mosque has disappeared and a brick and mud structure now occupies its place. It is in a dilapidated condition. The rauza, which is of stone, has lost its outer verandah on the southern, eastern, and northern sides. The tomb inside is of marble under an ornamented canopy. Attached to the rauza is a graveyard called the Rāni's Hajira.

- III. (36) Mustafā Shāhid's Masjid and Rauza near Sidi Salem's Haveli in Jamalpur. The masjid is very small now, all stone and white washed. Not far away, on a hillock in a grassy field, are to be seen ruins of what apparently was a mosque.
- III. (37) Shāh Allī Abū Ahmad's Masjid and Rauza in Rohitkela in Ravabkhal. The roof and all the pillars except one of this small mosque have been removed. Two slender minarets and the back wall with three niches, each with an inscription over it, are all that remain. It is now inhabited by a family.
- III. (38) Bābī Masjid in Rohitkela in Ravabkhal. Also called Shāh Gany Masjid. Of stone, built about A.D. 1752. The three walls with the minarets are all that remain.
- III. (39) Mardhawad Masjid in Mardhawad near the Lal Darwāzā. It is in complete ruin, the walls alone existing.
- III. (40) Abdu'l Wahhāb Shāh's Rauza, between Khanpur gate and Mirzapur, is tribulate in style, with a double colonnade all round and a high central dome. To the west of it are the back and north end walls of a brick mosque, in which are inserted a number of marble slabs bearing inscriptions. To the north west of it is the rauza of Abdu'l Wahhāb's son Shāh Ghias'ud din and of his grandson Sayyid Abdul Jahl. It is occupied by his descendant Sayyid Bakir Mian in the Pir of the R. Khanpur Nawab.
- III. (41) Nawāb Sardār Khān's Mosque and Tomb in Jamalpur Chakla. The mosque to the west of the tomb is of brick, has two pillars in front supporting arches and three pointed domes with gilt tops and crescents. The minarets are octagonal and of four stories. The rauza is inside a court with large gates. The corner spaces, and also round the four doors are filled with good open work in simple but varied geometrical patterns. The floor is of marble inlaid and there is a large inscription in the entrance. It has a high and egg shaped pointed dome with eight smaller ones round it. The central dome bears a sort of brass trifida being a crescent with a cross bar. The court is filled with weed, &c., and surrounded by a high crenellated wall. The entrance gateway is rather imposing.
- III. (42) Miyān Khan Jahan's Masjid close to the Khanja gate is of brick with seven bays and three aisles. It is roofed with small domes and has three niches; the inscription from the central one has been removed. The minbar has 7 steps. Of the tomb in front only two of the original nine domes are left. This mosque occupies the south western angle of the city walls on the river side, and it was at this point of the city that the walls were breached at the storming of Ahmadabad by General Godard in 1780.
- III. (43) The Dargāh of Pirān Pir, near this is a small dome surrounded by perforated work of no merit, and contains 3 tomb, with many others outside. The entrance porch to the court has been decorated in modern Muhammadian style. Pirān Pir is the greatest pir known in the Muhammadian world. Shāh Abdul Khalak Sayyid Abdul Kadar, one of his progeny in a direct line came and settled here upwards of 270 years ago. He lies buried in a rauza with perforated walls. The tomb is of marble. The masjid and rauza are known as Pirān Pirs. The masjid was built before the rauza but fell into complete decay. It has been rebuilt lately. The present holder is a descendant of Shāh Abdul Khalak.

- III (44) Shah Gazni near Ahl-i-Ahmad Shâh's tomb in Rohilvada dates from 922 A. H.
- (45) Navvi Maholat in Kalupui is a Borah masjid and contains two inscriptions. Thus masjid was built by Asbraf Khan, a Wazir under Shah Kutbudin. There is nothing left of the original mosque. The Borahs have built a new one on the old site.
- III (46) The Herâti Masjid in the left of the Delhi gate is a very small tile-roofed mosque containing an inscription of 4 lines.
- III (47) Inayat Shâh's Masjid in Shabpui was a very large brick one, of which the three walls alone remain. It has 5 brick mehîds with a marble inscription over the central one.
- III. (48) The City Qazi's Masjid in Astodia is a very small stone one built A. D. 1271. The mehîd and probably the windows have been taken from older buildings. Two windows in each end wall and two in front—each to the floor, two in the back are of 4 squares each. It has an inscription.
- III. (49) The Madrasa of Hidâyat Bakhsh Muhammad Akram-ud-din is said to have been built at a cost of Rs 1,24,000, the mosque has 5 bays and 3 aisles is very lofty with arches between the pillars, and roofed with domes and coved ceilings. It has perforated windows high up in the end and brick walls. 5 plain mehîds and 2 slender octagonal minars. It stands in a very large court surrounded with the buildings of the madrasa—now occupied by dyers and much dilapidated. Outside the madrasa is a small wooden mausoleum over the tombs of Maulana Nur-ud-din Sidi and Qazi Muhammad Nazim-ud-din Kibin, and to the west of it the tombs of Qazi Muhammad Rukhn-ul-Hak (having an inscription) and Qazi Muhammad Saleh.
- III (50) Ibrahim Sayyid's tomb and Muhammad Amin Khan's Masjid and Rauza, converted into Executive Engineer's Office in the Bhadr. There are three rauzas close to one another and they form the residence and office of the Executive Engineer of Ahmedabad. One of these is oval in plan and on that account is quite an exceptional structure. The old survey shows that there was a mosque attached to these rauzas, but it does not now seem to exist.
- III (51) Malik Sarban or Hingurishâh's Masjid near the Khas Bazar. A stone structure of plain construction with marble floor built up wards of 100 years ago. The minarets have disappeared and the ground all round and inside has been appropriated for dwelling houses. The mosque is now the private residence of an old man of the name of Jamil Shah and his family. A large tank not unlike the Kanlvi tank, bearing the name of Malik Salim exists in the lands of the village of Rakhial about three miles from Ahmedabad where he lies buried in a stone rauzi.
- III (52) Oja Bibi's Masjid and Rauza near Pirmad Shah's Rauza. A pretty little mosque all of stone built about A. D. 1504-5. The real name of the lady in whose memory this mosque was built is Khonja Bibi. It is beautifully carved, the minarets and kutub especially. In front of the mosque is a rauzi with carved and tiled walls of stone. The interior of the mosque has been whitewashed. Within the rauzi are three tombs. It is a dirty place. There is also a very large underground reservoir the upper portion being beautifully terraced. The present holder of the property is the Pirzada of Junagadh, who lives in Ahmedabad.

- III. (53) Shâh Fâzil's Masjid in the Arsenal enclosure. It was built in A.D. 1497-88. It is a good stone structure in a very fair state of preservation. Under the masjid there is a sort of crypt holding a tomb.
- III. (54) Ali Akhar Sayyid Jalali Masjid and Rauza in Dânapith. These were held by a faqir who not many years ago sold them to a Bania. The mosque has disappeared and the rauza is used for storing grain.
- III. (55) Nawâb Shâhjân Khân and Momin Khân's Masjid and Rastam Alikhân's Masjid in Mirzâpur. These buildings occupied a large area of ground, portion of which came to be subsequently used as a cemetery. Nearly all has been at various times sold and made away with.
- III. (56) A small rauza near the Râekhad gate and the Arsenal. A very fine structure. The rauza and land are now in the possession of a Pârsi family.
- III. (57) Edrus Shâh's Rauza in Jhaverivâdî near Panjra Pol. A fine stone rauza domed, with walls done up with perforated slabs, belonging to the family of Sayyid Edrus. There are three large and two small tombs in it. Over the central tomb, under which lie the remains of the first Edrus who came to India, stands a canopy all inlaid with mother-o'-pearl. The building is all whitewashed and is now held by the present Sayyid Edrus who lives at Surat.
- III. (58) A masjid called Galiara Masjid on the road leading from Khâdiâ chauki to Nowâ Darawâzâ. A fine small mosque. The entrance door of the mosque is surmounted by a stoop arch of exquisite carving.
- III. (59) Pir Kasmâl's Graveyard opposite the Khâdiâ Police Station.
- III. (60) Rauzas of Sayyid Muhammad Jâffar and Seroji Sâheb at "Norris' Bungalow." One of the rauza's is of stone with perforated panelled windows all around. The other is of brick and chunam.
- III. (61) Qâzi Sâheb's Masjid in Râepur. A small mosque in ruins originally known as Nasar Sayyid's Mosque.
- III. (62) Nasar Sayyid's tomb in Gundivâdî in Âstodia. A fine marble tomb.
- III. (63) Shekh Muhammad Jâhir Masjid and Rauza opposite Seth Jesinghai's residence, Ghi Kântâ road. The mosque has fallen in, a portion of the back wall containing the principal kibla is all that remains.
- III. (64) Muhammad Ali Sâheb's Masjid near Sidi Sâlem's Haveli. Stone and brick and chunam masonry, partly modern. Of no account.
- III. (65) Qutb Sayyid's Rauza in Jamâlpur, Medanivâdî. The rauza belongs to the time of Ahmad Shah and is now used as a dwelling by a faqir.
- III. (66) Muhammad Sayyid's Masjid called also the Ghi Kântâ Masjid opposite the Ghi Kântâ Police Station.
- III. (67) Pir Dastgir's Masjid and Rauza near Dâyl Bhlî's Wâdi, Ghi Kântâ road. The masjid has completely gone and the ground on which it stood is now occupied by a range of low buildings.

- II. (68) Rauzas of Shâh 'Alî and Ijat Khân and tomb of Shâh Gazon on the road leading from Khâmshâh's Chakla to Jamâlpur. The mosque has now disappeared. The tank is the only trace left of it. The rauza is in ruins, but the tomb in it is still standing.
- III. (69) Sayyid Jâffar's Masjid near Sayyid Vâdâ in Âstodia. Well, built of brick and chunam. At present the masjid and its grounds are used by Afghan travellers.
- III. (70) Padshâhi Masjid also called Dhâlgar Vâdâ's Masjid near Hope Market. The name of the mosque is properly "Khams Salât" (five nimâzes or services).
- III. (71) Âlef Masjid in Khâs Bâzâr near Karanj. A small structure on a very high plinth. The masjid was originally built about the time the Jami Masjid was completed.
- III. (72) Hâji Sâheb's Masjid at Lal Bâwâ's Tekrâ in Dariâpur. A mosque about 250 years old.
- III. (73) Miyan Muhammad Husen's Masjid also called Dâdâmiyan's Masjid near Chandan Talavdi. A fine mosque and rauza but not very old.
- III. (74) Sayyid Âli Masjid in Râepur opposite Mukerivâdâ. This mosque is of recent construction. The rauza is a plain domed building with a tomb of marble within.
- III. (75) Ambli Masjid in Râepur, opposite Pakhâli pol. The present mosque is small and plain. The rauza has been cleared of the tomb it contained and is now used as a warehouse.
- III. (76) Husain Sayyid's Masjid in Panchpati road in Mogal's pol. The Masjid now goes by the name of the Qâzi Ali's Masjid and is used as a school.
- III. (77) Bâwâ Latif Masjid in Khâs Bâzâr. The mosque is entirely gone and the site is occupied by a shed in which fagirs live.
- III. (78) Shâh Fa'ih's Masjid and Graveyard to the south of the Mills in Shâhpur, a small but massive mosque of brick and chunam, perfectly plain.
- III. (79) Minina Chhuilani Masjid otherwise Mirâ's Masjid near the Mira Police Station in Lunâsvâdâ. It is in ruins. Built by one Mira Sayyid Ali who is buried at Unav in Gâikvâd's territory, about 3 miles distant from the Unjha Station. It is a place of pilgrimage among the Muhammadans.
- III. (80) Pîr Vazir Shâh's Masjid opposite the travellers' bungalow.
- III. (81) Pirmudshâni Masjid on the road from Pankornikâ to Ghi Kântâ. A modern structure.
- III. (82) Badâ Sâheb's Masjid behind Pirmudshâh's rauza.
- III. (83) Shekh Muhammad Chisti's Rauza north of Rângrej pol in Patwâcheri, Khâs Bâzâr. A fine domed building of brick and chunam.
- III. (84) Asa Sâheb's Masjid or Yisimmiyan's Masjid in Râekhad, Handia's mekhalla. A small insignificant mosque of brick and chunam.
- III. (85) Badshâh Sayyid's Masjid or Naginâ pol's Masjid in Naginâ pol in Dariâpur. A small mosque of brick and chunam, well kept.

- III. (86) Muhammad Masjid or Malik Ahmad's Masjid, near Topivala pol in Kalapur.
- III. (87) Bawa Ahmad's Masjid on the Salapos Road behind Alef Masjid in Khas Bazar.
- III. (88) Tomb of Khan Jahān or Rāv Manlik the last Rāv of Sorath, who was defeated by Mahmud Bigarh in 1470 or 1472 and became a convert to Muhammadanism.
- III. (89) Ubramji Kuli Khan's Tomb included in the compound of the Collector's hungalow and office.
- III. (90) Mosque of Shāh Jallal near Bhativada in Rāchhad.
- (91) There are some beautifully carved wooden pigeon-houses and house-fronts well worth attention and delineation.

Buildings without the city walls—

- II b. (92) The tomb of Daryā Khān north of the city near Achyut Bibi's Masjid (No. 90) erected in 1453 A.D., is imposing and notable for its constructional peculiarities. It is entirely of brick, the walls being very thick. It is the most massive building in or around Ahmadabad. It has a very large and lofty brick dome. It has five arches in each face of the verandah. Daryā Khān was one of Mahmud Bigarah's nobles who founded the quarter of Daryapur in Ahmadabad. The structure is purely Muhammadan in style and is interesting as a fine specimen of brick-work on a large scale. Its proportions are fine, the walls are massive and form fitting supports to its large and lofty dome. Some of the arches and smaller domes of the outer corridors are cracked, and the brick-work of the piers near the ground is considerably worn away in places.
- II b. (93) Achyut Bibi's Masjid and Tomb, $\frac{1}{4}$ mile north of the city and on the east side of the river, partly ruined by the earthquake of 1819. The masjid was built by Hāji Malik Behāu'd-din Imidu'l-mulk, brother of Malik Maksud Vazir, in 1469, for his wife Bibi Achyut Kuli. It has a fine façade and there is much tracery on the bases of the minarets. It is almost a copy of the Mirzapur Queen's mosque and has three marble mehrab's with an inscription over the central one. The mimbar is of marble and has a canopy over it. The central one of the three domes is raised and neatly carved inside. The tomb in the enclosure is small and neat. The upper portion of the wall surrounding the inner enclosure is perforated between small pilasters; and the entrance to it has been carved with much taste, but will soon be a total ruin unless cared for.
- II a. (94) Tomb of Mir Abu Turāb outside the city to the south,—an octagonal dome supported on twelve pillars, with a corridor round it forming a square of 41 feet, with six pillars on each face. Here the arch is used as a constructive feature throughout the building, the pillars becoming the piers that support it.
- I b. (95) Mosque and tomb of Sayyid Usman, a mile north-west from the city, and on the west of the river, built by Muhammad Bigarah in 1460 in the style of the Sarkhēj mosque. In the tomb "a very considerable amount of variety is obtained by grouping the pillars in twos and fours and by the different spacing. In elevation the dome looks heavy for the substructure, but not so in perspective, and when the screens were added to enclose the central square, it was altogether the most successful sepulchral design carried out in the pillared style at Ahmadabad" (Fergusson). It is 78 feet square and has a dome 38 feet in diameter, supported on twelve pillars.

III. (96) Miyan Khān Chisti's Masjid near the river, about 2 miles north of the city, between Aohyut Bibi's mosque and Shāhi Bigh, built in A.D. 1465 by Mālik Makhsud Vazīr, has been turned into a dwelling-house by the railway officials. This desecration took place about twenty years ago. It has two fine minarets with rounded or domed tops. The land is personal inām land in the name of Mehmud Miā Khub Miā to whom a sanad has been issued by the Collector.

I b. (97) Shāh Ālam, about 3 miles south of the city. The tomb (cir. 1476) is surrounded by a screen of perforated trellis work, as is also the corridor round it. The interior of the dome is inlaid with mother-of-pearl and prettily painted. Beside it is the tomb of Mai Ālam, a somewhat plainer building, and the large masjid built by Muhammad Sūlah Badakshi with two lofty and elegant minars built by Nisābat Khān and Saif Khān; also just within the gate an assembly hall built by Muzaḥfar Shāh II. (1561-72) and several other buildings. At present there are there villages attached to these buildings for their up-keep, viz., Sarsa in Mehmudābād talukā of Kheda, and Isanpur and Vasna Maktampur in Daskroi talukā of Ahmadābād; and an amount in cash of Rs. 143-8-8 is paid to the Ināmdār annually from the Daskroi Māmlatdār's treasury. The edifices were totally neglected formerly just as the other large mosques and ruwas in and around Ahmadābād have been. Sir Barrow H. Ellis, K.C.S.I., in his official visit to the Ahmadābād district during his tour of 1862-63, as Revenue Commissioner, N. D., took advantage of the opportunity of the settlement of the rights of the Ināmdār to stipulate for a portion of the revenues of the villages being taken over by the local authorities for the repair of the buildings and the arrangement received the sanction of Government. This portion amounts to upwards of Rs. 2,000 every year, more or less according to the season. The work of repair commenced in 1866 or 1867.

- I b (102) Bibi Ji's Masjid at Ryapur Hirpur is a very fine mosque, very well proportioned and elegant, and deserves to be preserved as a good specimen of the Ahmad Shāhi style of architecture. Bibi Ji was the daughter of Sayyid Khun Mir, and wife of Sayyid Buda Sāheh. The mosque has a gallery in the northern end like that of Ahmad Shāh. In the interior are 103 pillars. There are five lūllas, all of marble, with fine carvings. The minbar is all of stone with twelve steps and no canopy. There are five domes in the roof. The minarets are very fine, one of them is in fair condition but has lost its finial, the other has lost a great deal more of its top. These were shattered by lightning a number of years ago. The raua is domed and walled with an arched opening on each side, done up with lattice work. The main tomb, which is of stone, is said to cover the remains of Bibi Ji.
- II b (103) Mālik Īsan-ul-Mulk's mosque at Īsanpur, 3 miles south of Ahmadābād. This is a very neat though small masjid with a corridor enclosing the court in front and in the middle of which stands a neat domed tomb. The central mehrab of the mosque has been torn out and the outer wall of the corridor partly destroyed. The court is filled with weeds and shrubs. Mālik Īsan entitled Nizam ul-Mulk was a noble of Gujarat of the time of Mahmud Bigarāh.
- III (104) A furlong or so to the south is a small stone mosque somewhat of the style of Darvāsh Alis with central and side bays separated by narrower ones. It has three richly carved *mehrab*s and two windows in the back wall, a window and arched door in each end, and minars sculptured in patterns differing from those prevalent in Ahmadābād.
- III (105) Between this mosque and the road is a neat stone stepwell known as Jethābhāi's, with a domed chhatra on 12 pillars at the head of the steps and has Hindu sculptures in the niches. A stair on the north side leads down to the platform in the middle. It was built with stones obtained from mosques, &c., at Dām Limbā.
- III (106) At the entrance to the village is Jiji Bāhu Rāni's stone stepwell, and elsewhere are two other brick stepwells.
- III (107) Mālik Alim, called also Khudavand Khan father in law of Sultan Muḥammad the son of Sultan Ahmad built a stone mosque and tomb at Ālimpur, now Dām Limbā. It has five large domes, without ornament except pendants in their centres, the central one is raised above the level of the roof like that of Kutub'd-din. The five *mehrab*s have all been torn out. In the roof just over the entrance, as also in front of the central mehrab are slabs beautifully carved in lozenge by and sunk areas. The tomb of Shikh Kṛmal Māli is close behind. It is utterly neglected and dirty and in a very dilapidated condition. The minarets were taken down about 12 years ago owing to their being shaky. The raua which was in front of the mosque was sold some 30 years ago by the late holder the *Inām*dar of Shāh Ālun, to the late Jethābhāi Mulji who used the stones and other materials taken from it in the construction of the stepwell between Īsanpur and Dām Limbā. There is not a vestige left of this raua.
- I a (108) The Moti Shāhi Bagh (1455 A.D.) the palace built in the reign of Shāh Jahan is now the residence of the Commissioner N. D. The subsidiary building known as the "Chhotā Shāhi Bagh" was the zenana or ladies' palace. It is now the residence of the Superintendent of Police.

- III. (109) Ruined mosque at the railway station, of which only the mindra remain, and are the highest in Ahmadābād. It probably belongs to the early part of the 16th century.
- I a. (110) Dādā Harir's well at Asārva, on the north-east outskirts of the City, built in A.D. 1409, is one of the finest in Gujārāt. The entrance to this stepwell, all of stone, by a domed platform, the roof of which rests on 12 pillars. The flight of steps leading to the water is broken by landings surmounted by flat stone terraces standing on pillars. The first landing has one terrace, the second two, the third three, and so on. At the further end is the well from which water is brought up by Los. There is a winding staircase down each side to the lowest landing. It has an inscription.
- II a. (111) Dādā Harir's mosque and tomb are situated behind the well which once formed part of the same property. The mosque is a fine building, well carved, but its interior is whitewashed. There is a good deal of carved work about the kiblas, mindras, and screens. The upper portions of the minarets were taken down some 25 years ago as they were very shaky. The rauza is on the north-eastern side and hut a few feet from the mosque. The premises are in the charge of a Government paggi or watchman who lives in a small room to the south-east of the mosque. An inscription.
- II b. (112) Mātā Bhavāni's well to the north of that of Dādā Harir. This well is supposed to be the only remnant of the old city of Asārva. It is popularly ascribed to the Pāndavas. It is perhaps contemporaneous with the Mān Sarovar tank at Virangām and the Mulav tank at Dholka, both of which belong to the dynasty of Siddharāja.
- III. (113) Kāch Masjid in Tājpūr, was so named from the tiles with which it was roofed being covered with a bluish green glaze. The two pillars in front and the walls are of stone. It has three mehrdbs, and a mimbār of 5 steps. On the walls are numerous inscriptions, among which are six copies of the Kālimā, but from over the central and left mehrdb the inscription slabs have been taken out. The bases of the mindras are plainly carved. The court has a porch on the north side, and has been enclosed with a high wall having balcony windows. In this small court is a tank of water.
- III. (114) Sāhā Badā Kasum's Rauza in Tājpūr near the Kāch Masjid. A fine stone building, the outer domes resting on 20 columns. The walls of the rauza consist of carved stone slabs rising from about 3 feet from the base. There are four tombs in the rauza, the main tomb having a plain canopy over it.
- III. (115) Mithapur Masjid near the Nikol gate in Saraspur.
- III. (116) Hamsa Salāt Mashur's Masjid in Dhaigavādā is a small brick mosque with wooden pillars and roof. The central mehrdb is carved and over it is an inscription; the two side mehrdbs are plain.
- III. (117) The Jaina temple of Hatosiogh (1848). The external porch is of great magnificence and most elaborately ornamented. In the court are sixteen shrines on each side and others at the back. The temple in the middle of the court is of two storeys and very richly ornamented.
- III. (118) The Kānkaria tank or Haozi-Kutb, $\frac{3}{4}$ mile south-east from the Rāpūr gate, A.D. 1461, one of the largest of its kind in India, being a polygon of 34 sides each 190 feet long. The supply sluice is exquisitely carved. In the centre of the tank is an island connected with the bank by a causeway. On the island was the Nāginā garden and Ghattāmandal palace.

Ia. (119) The Dutch tombs near the Kānkaria tank, to the south-east of the city, 1641 to 1699. (Briggs' Cities of Gujarāshtra, pp. 261-266).

III. (120) Jaina temple of Chintāman in Saraspur, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile east from the city, built by Sāntidās, a Bānia, in 1638, at a cost of nine lāhs, was defiled by Aurangzib and is now neglected.

2. Sarkhej, 5 miles south-east from Ahmadābād. An important cluster of Mohamadan buildings of the 13th century, among which are:—

Ib. (1) The tomb of Shekh Abmad Khattu Ganj Bakhsh of Anhilvādī, begun in A.D. 1445 by Muhammad Shāh and completed in 1451. In this "an attempt has been made to get a larger dome than the usual octagonal arrangement would admit of, but not quite successfully." The tomb is surrounded by an inner trellis screen of metal perforated in beautiful patterns. The exterior walls are filled with windows of perforated stone. To light the interior of the tomb four tracery windows are introduced into the dome.

Ib. (2) In front of the tomb is a pavilion of sixteen pillars roofed with nine small domes, "forming as pleasing a mode of roofing as ever was applied to such a small detached building of this class."

Ib. (3) A mosque with ten domes, "the perfection of elegant simplicity and an improvement on the plan of the Jamī Masjid. Except the Motī Masjid at Agrā there is no mosque in India more remarkable for simple elegance than this" (Fergusson, I. and E. Arch., p. 532). It was completed by Mahmūd Bigarah in 1451 A.D.

Ib. (4) Tomb of Mahmūd Bigarah and his son Muzaffar II., on the east.

Ib. (5) Tomb of Bībī Rājāī, the queen of Mahmūd, to the west. Also a covered gateway leading into the front of the latter two tombs, a covered hall overlooking the great tank and other buildings.

IIb. (6) The great tank with its sluices, &c.

IIb. (7) The Palace and Harem, a large building on the west side of the tank.

Ia. 3. Batwa, 5 miles south of Ahmadābād. Tomb of Burhān'ud-dīn Qutbu'l Alam, the father of Shāh Alam, who died A.D. 1452, erected by Mahmūd Bigarah, similar to the one near Kaira. The outer arches have fallen down and all the perforated work has disappeared. "The monument itself is of most elaborate workmanship" (Hope), but was perhaps never finished. Near it is another tomb over the son of the saint, built without arches. The Mirat-i-Ahmadi describes this as the mosque and tomb of Hazrat Qutbu'l-Aktāb Sayyid Bāshān'ud-dīn Abū Muhammad Abdullāh Bākhārī, commonly called Qutbu'l-Alam, who died A.D. 859 (A.D. 1446). (Surveyed)

- IIIb. (4) Tanka Masjid, built in the time of Firuz Shāh
- IIIb. (5) Multāv Talāv made by the mother of Siddharāja Jayasinha.

VI.—DHANDEKA TĀLUKĀ.

1. Rānpur derives its name from Rānāji Gōhel, its founder, and as Mokhrāji, the son of Rānāji, fought with the army of Muḥammad Tughlak near Gogho and was killed in battle, it may be presumed that Rānāji flourished in the beginning of the fourteenth century. Rānpur is said to have been a large and flourishing town in former days. The debris of old houses is found to a distance of about two miles from the present village site. It appears to have suffered greatly in the time of Mahimūd Bigarah of Ahmadnād.

- III On the south side of the village at the junction of the Bhadar and Goma rivers stands an old fort, now much dilapidated, built in A.H. 1048 (A.D. 1638) by Āzam Khān, the Subedar of Gujarat, during the reign of Shah Jahan

The inscription on the gate of the fort runs thus

' He is the Creator and the Omniscient The great Lord Āzam Khān, the lord of his time, the like of whom was never given birth to by this bride of the world

' The intrepid I on, the bravest of the brave, and the lord of the earth

The Khān of exalted rank may his life be long desires me to find out [in verse] the date of this castle.

From which be for aye removed the influence of the evil eye

"Plunging into the ocean of thought I impressed with the seal of my heart [the date derived from the numerical value of the letters composing the words]

' Āzamul Bilad (corresponding with the sacred month of Muharram 1048 A.H.)

It appears that at this time a chief named Shihju was reigning at Ranpur. The Kāthi living in the neighbourhood committed great mischief and plundered the villages. Shihju asked for assistance from Āzam Khan, the Suba of Gujarat, to put down these marauders. He consented and was about to send one of his Sardars for the purpose. At this time the Kāthi carried their excursions up to the gates of Ahmadabad, carrying off men and cattle. Āzam Khan went out in person to chastise them and hunted them to Botad and Palyad. A battle was fought in which the Kāthi chief was taken prisoner and beheaded. Āzam Khan then intended to establish a thandā at Botad but Shihju persuaded him to do so at Ranpur, telling him that the water supply at the latter place was better than at Botad. Āzam Khan acceded to this and built the fort at the junction of the Bhadar and Goma rivers. Entering from the east corner of the fort we arrive at a gate which faces the south. Proceeding inside we come to another gate which faces the east. This last gate is the main entrance to the buildings. A little further on we find a masjid facing the east. Near the masjid is the grave of Rajushah Pir. An inscription in Persian is on the wall of the masjid, which is translated thus —

God is great. In the reign of the king magnificent as Jamshed the just and the generous Shāhbu d-din Muhammad II the lord of the time, Shāh Jahān the valiant warrior — may the Almighty perpetuate his dominion — in the month of Zī Hajj in the year 1050 A.H., the humble slave of the Almighty Āzam Khān, during the term of his Subdāship of Gujarat, laid the foundation of this sacred mosque in this castle of Shikhpur and completed it that the servants of the true God may worship him."

There is a reservoir in the masjid, which was originally filled with the water from a well in the inner part of the fort. Chunam drains are still to be seen to carry the water of this well to all parts of the fort. On the west side of the well is a hamrām khānā or bath room, and a terrace is built above. There is a cellar underneath this bath room which is said to proceed to a great distance underground. On the west of this subterranean passage is Mahādeva and Rājibā Mata, which are said to have been put in after the fall of the Muhammadan dynasty and the assumption of the country by the Marathas.

After Ranaji's death his son Mokhrayi established his head quarters at Piram near Gogha and was a renowned pirate. He was killed near Gogha in a battle which took place between him and the army of Muhammad Tughlak, the son of Ghiyas'ud din.

When Mahmud Bigarah was ruler of Gujrat, one of the Bhayads or cousins of this Mokhrayi, who was also named Ranaji, was in the enjoyment of the Ranpur estate, and held it as an independent chief. The Raja of Murwar had married his two daughters the eldest to Mahmud Bigarah and the younger to this Ranaji. It so happened that both the sisters one day met at their father's house. The Begum asked her younger sister to come and dine with her. Out of respect for her elder sister, without giving out the true cause, she refused to dine. When further pressed on the matter, Ranaji's wife plainly told her that as she had married a Musalman, she could not now take her meals with her. The elder sister took this to heart and went and informed her husband about the insult that was offered to her. Mahmud tried to effect an amicable settlement by converting Ranaji and his wife, but failed in his attempt to do so. Ranaji then fell under the displeasure of the chief. An army was sent to Ranpur under the command of Bhauderikhan. Ranaji was killed and the country came under the direct control of Mahaud Bigarah, who subsequently bestowed it on Halaji Parmar, the ancestor of the present Molestatam Parmars in Ranpur.

A Jat Sardar residing in Sind had a beautiful daughter named Samribai. The king of Sind wanted to marry her but his overtures were rejected and the Jat left the country and came to Muli, where Lagdharji and Halaji of Parmar descent were reigning. They kept the Jats under their protection and promised to assist them against the forces of the chief of Sind. The latter, however, followed and laid siege to Muli. Through the treachery of an officer the single well from which the Parmars derived their water supply was polluted by the head of a cow being thrown into it. The Parmars then surrendered. Sumribai, the daughter of the Jat Sardar, was however, sent away to some secure place and Halaji was delivered over to the enemy as a hostage. Sumribai retired towards Vanod where she died and where her grave is still pointed out. On the other side, Lagdharji sought the protection of Mahmud Bigarah who thereupon sent an army against Sind and defeated him. Halaji was delivered, but only to fall into the hands of Mahmud Bigarah. He was converted to Muhammadanism, and Ranpur together with the surrounding villages which were recently conquered from Ranaji Gohel were bestowed on him. Thus the Gohel dynasty became extinct at Ranpur, and Halaji established himself at that place. Lagdharji, however, remained a Hindu and his descendants are still at Muli. Halaji was killed near Dhandhuka in an engagement between him and the Kathi, and his grave is still to be seen there and is known as Halusi Pir.

Halaji was succeeded by Hasuji, who was succeeded by his son Kubanji on whose death his son Shahuji came to the throne. It was during the time of the latter that Azam Khan the Subhedar of Gujarat built the fort at Ranpur. Didaaji was the eldest son of Shahuji and he succeeded his father. His son Tajaji subdued the Kathis. The succession remained in a direct line for three generations. Togaji succeeded his father Tajaji. Hamoji succeeded him at his death, then Sahelaji and Ahimbhai ascended the throne in succession.

During the time of the last-mentioned in A.D. 1736 Raja Sabalsing of Wadhwan and the son of the Dhrangadhrâ Raja had gone on a visit of condolence to the Raja of Bhavnagar. On their way back they remained for one night at Rānpur. These two princes went to see the fort. They were so delighted with it that they did not wish to leave it, but resolved to occupy it by force if necessary. A fight ensued between the followers of Ahimbhāi and those of the two princes. The Rājā of Dhraṅgadhrā reprimanded his son and called him back with his men. Sahalsing also went away to Wadhvān, but returned with reinforcements and laid siege to the fort and reduced the garrison to great distress. At this time Dāmāji Gāikvād of Barodā had come to Dholkā to levy tribute. Ahimbhāi secretly went to him and hired his assistance. On the arrival of the Gāikvād's forces, Sahalsing raised the siege and proceeded towards Nāgesh. Dāmāji followed him, and in an engagement Sahalsing was defeated and taken prisoner. Owing to the intervention of Ahimbhāi, Sahalsing was spared an ignominious death, but kept in prison at Soṅad, from which he returned after paying a large ransom. Ahimbhāi bestowed the lands and revenue of Rānpur on Dāmāji in consideration of the assistance thus afforded to him. The Gāikvād then established his own thānā in the village. Subsequent to this the country passed into the hands of the Peśvā, and when the British Government came into possession after the battle of Khadki (Kirkee), the village of Rānpur was treated as khālsā, while the rest of the villages enjoyed by Ahimbhāi's descendants are held under the Tālukdāri tenure.

- III. 2. Bhimnāth According to tradition the place where the present mandira of Bhimnāth stands was the abode of the giant Hidimbā. The Pāṇḍavas came thither. Arjuna was in the habit of not taking his food till he had performed the pūjā of Mahādeva. In this jungle they could not find any mandira of Mahādeva, so he could not take his regular meals. His brother Bhīma, thinking that he would have to fast long, went out in search of a mandira. He came to a place where some jala trees were. (Those now standing are said to have existed since that time.) He dug a hole in the ground, put a stone therein, and covered the same with a heap of earth and rubbish. Bhīma performed an imitation pūjā and placed wild flowers on the heap. He returned to camp and informed his brother Arjuna that he had found out a Śiva station, and pointed to the jala trees. Arjuna went to the spot, made his devotions, returned, and took his meals. Bhīma then ridiculed his brother, and told him that the place where he had worshipped was not a Śiva station, but that he himself had put a piece of stone underground and promised to point it out if he wished. Arjuna replied that for himself he was sincere in his devotions, and had believed that it was a Śiva station. All the five brothers and their mother Kuntī went to the spot. Bhīma removed the heap of dust and rubbish as well as the wild flowers, and struck his stick on the stone, which fractured it and to their astonishment milk began to flow from it. The fracture made with Bhīma's stick in the stone is still shown to the devotees. As the god thus showed himself by a stroke of Bhīma's stick, it was named after him as Bhimnāth Mahādeva.

An ancestor of the present Mahanta who was at that time wandering round the place as an ascetic dreamed one night that he was directed to make pūjā to this Mahādeva. This story was thus circulated and the place grew famous. In Samvat 1535 Mahanta Madhagiri built an ḍjā round the Mahādeva, which is not covered by any building. The branches of the jala trees have extended all along the place, and it is said to be the orders of Mahādeva not to cut any portion of the wood of these trees. The wall round the linga was built in Samvat 1831, with several outhouses. In the time of the present who set apart about 200 bighas of land in the village of Vejalka for this purpose. On the last day of Śrāvana, Vad. 30th, a fair is held at Bhīmnāth, which lasts for three days. Hindus think when visiting Drākā that they must also visit and pay their devotion to Bhīmnātha, hence there is a constant influx of pilgrims. Every morning and evening there is a general call for dinner. Those who can partake of the meals without objection to their caste feelings do so; those who cannot are provided with raw grain and cook their own food.

The Mahantas are not allowed to marry. They adopt a Chēlā. They must make the selection of a Chēlā from particular castes, such as Atit, Gosāvi, Bāirāgi and Rāhāri. As far as can be ascertained, the following is a list of the successive Mahantas who have had the management of Bhīmnāth mandira of Mahādeva :—

3. Bhadiyād, 2 miles north-west from Dholerā. The rauza of Pīr Bhadiyādra is a plain square-domed building held sacred by the Musalmāns and some lower castes of Hindus in Gujārāt, as the tomb of Sayyid-Bokhārī Mahmūdshāh Walid Sayyid Abdula Rahman. He was a native of Uchh in the Punjāb, and about 600 years ago left home at the age of 15 on pilgrimage. At that time a Rājput Rājā ruled at Chokri, formerly known as Chakravartī, 7 kos south of Dhandhukā. This Rājā, it is said, was a bitter enemy to the Musalmāns and never broke his fast till he had killed one of them and made a mark on his forehead with the blood of the slain. This practice he continued till it reached the ears of Mahmūdshāh through a woman whose son had fallen a victim. Mahmūdshāh led an army to Chokri and killed the Rājā. The son of the latter killed Mahmūdshāh in revenge for his father's death. When Mahmūdshāh was at the point of death, he requested the Musalmāns about him to be buried at the side of Gajhaashāh, and in compliance with this request he was buried where the rauza at Bhadiyād stands now. This rauza was built some 200 years after his death at the expense of the Nawāb of Cambay, who also assigned to it an annual allowance of Rs. 350. The visits which Shāh Ālam of Ahmadābād and other Musalmāns of note paid to the rauza rendered it attractive to others. Thousands of people, chiefly Musalmāns from all parts of Gujārāt, annually come to pay their homage to the Bhadiyādra Pīr. A blind Brāhman is said to have had his eye-sight restored on his embracing the Muhammadan faith. There was an iron chain in the dargāh weighing a man and a quarter. By means of this chain the innocence or otherwise of a person accused of a crime used to be tested. He was made to wear it and to walk with it to a distance of seven steps. If the chain broke into two pieces of itself after this the innocence of the party was proved beyond a doubt, otherwise he was held guilty and punished for his crime.

II—KHEDĀ OR KAIRA ZILLA.

I.—KAIRA TAUKĀ

1. Mahmudabad (1) Rauza of Mubarak Sayyid, prime minister of Mahmūd Bigarah (died 966 A.H.), at Sojah, 3 miles north-east from Mahmudabad, one of the finest Muhammadan remains in Gujarat. "There is a simplicity about its plan, a solidity and balance of parts in the design, which is not always found in the tomb, and has rarely, if ever, been surpassed in any tomb in India. The details, too, are all elegant and appropriate, so that it only wants somewhat increased dimensions to rank among the very first of its class. Its constructive arrangements too, are so perfect that no alteration in them would be required, if the scale had been very much increased. The tomb itself is surrounded by a screen of perforated stone work, of the very finest tracery, and, with its double verandah, aids in giving the sepulchral chamber that seclusion and repose so indispensable in a mausoleum" (Fergusson's Architecture, p. 539). It contains two central tombs—of Mubarak Sayyid and his son Miran Sayyid, and three later tombs, on the east side, also one enclosed at a later date in the east verandah. There are several recent tombs also in the verandah.

The tomb stands in the corner of a small irregular fort, the lower portion of the walls of which are of stone—apparently Hindu work,—and the upper part of brick and probably much more modern. The north east corner of the rauza has been restored with brick, and alterations have been made in the screens. It has been sadly injured by the villagers within the last 20 years and is greatly in need of some care being taken of it. (Surveyed)

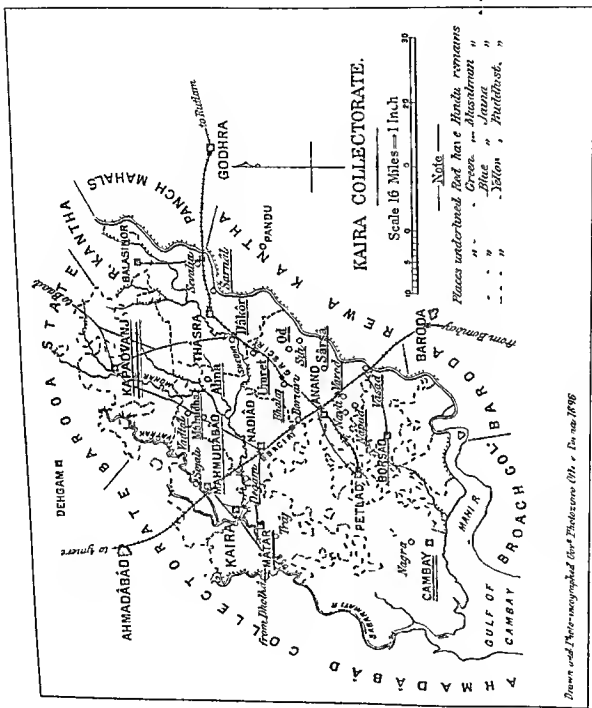

Inscriptions.—Three of quotations from the Qurān, on the wall and two short ones on the marble tombs.

To the east of this dargāh are two low brick ones containing the tombs of Saifud-din and Nizamud-din, brothers of Miran Sayyid's mother and of the architect of the large dargāh. To the west of them are the minars of an idgāh. The larger of these small dargāhs has been built with small chhatris at the corners of the dome in imitation of the large one. Down the river a little are the minars of a mosque one of which is partly undermined by the river and leans over a good deal. It must soon fall in.

(2) The Phir or Bharmaria well, a mile south, is a curious stone structure of the time of Mahmūd Shah (15th century). It differs from those of Borad and Umret in being octagonal, and having four stairs leading down to a range of galleries in a very poor state of repair.

(3) In the town of Mahmudabad is also a good tāv or step-well, of the time of the founder of the city.

V.—ÂNAND TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Umret, 12 miles N.N.E. from Ânand, on the Dākor branch railway. Another bāvadi or step-well, perhaps 400 or 500 years old, and by some ascribed to Siddharāja. It is built below of stone, and above of brick. It is between Umret and Dākor, is of five storeys and is descended by 109 steps. In the upper storey is a seat and a niche dedicated to Bhadrakālī. It bears no inscription.
- III. 2. Od, about 8 miles to the north-east has another bāvadi, seven storeys deep, arched over, very plain, with external coating of chunam. (Surveyed.)
3. Yared, 4 miles south east from Ânand, has a very old bāvadi said to have been built by Siddharāja Jayasinba. It was repaired and cleaned about a century ago by Jaysinghbhārati Malbhārati, a gōsvai.
- III. 4. Sarsa, 8 miles east from Ânand. Another bāvadi said to have been built 500 years ago by a Kbirawal Brāhman. It was repaired in 1820 and in 1866.
- III. 5. Wasad, on the railway, 9 miles south-east from Ânand, is a phrma or well with a spiral stair leading down to the water. Over the well are terraces on two sides, that on a third has fallen, and the well is out of repair.
- III. 6. Sili, 12 miles east from Ânand. A splendid tank 73 yards square with temple, &c., constructed by Bāi Bālibāi, daughter of Rājōśri Mehral (or Malhār) Nārājana of Barodā about 1826 A.D., known as the Hiri Tank, for the repair of which the rent of 321½ acres of land are set apart, assessed at Rs. 113.
- III. 7. Bhalaj, 7 miles N.N.E. from Ânand on the Dākor line. A bāvadi of six storeys with 70 steps down to the water,—attributed to Siddharāja, and in fair preservation. It has a seat at the foot of the first descent of 9 steps.
- III. 8. Napad, 14 miles west of Wasad, a handsome octagon pond, with a canseway on twenty-four arches to the middle of it, where are the remains of a chhatra. Also some stone trellis work at the inlet. A rde of the same age (about 400 years old) is to the east of the village.

VI.—BORSAD TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Borsad. The step-well near the lachiri, built in 1197 by one Vasu Soma and his family, is of 7 storeys and has 13 arches, the surface of the water being reached by flights of steps. It was cleaned out in 1872-73.
- Insription.—On this well in Sanskrit, dated Saṃvat 1553, 13th Śrāvana Tad.
- III. (1) Napa Wanto tank ascribed to Mahmūd Bigirab, with a house in the middle of it.
- III. (2) There is a temple dedicated to Mahankaleśvara Mahadeva, about half a mile from Borsad,—not remarkable in any way but contains an enormous Siva linga. (Surveyed.)

II.—KAPADVANJ TALUKA.

- I.b. 1. Kapadvanj contains some very old buildings. A beautiful arch described by
 III. K. Forbes in his Rds Māla and a kunda and well; also an underground temple of Śiva and a fine Jaiaa temple. (Surveyed.)

Inscriptions:—At the entrance to the Māmlatdār's lacheri is one of the beginning of the 13th century A.D., and on a mosque are three in Arabic.

(Copperplate grants, purchased by the Archaeol. Survey, Epig. Ind., vol. I. part i. p. 52).

III.—NADIAD TALUKA.

- III. 1. Dega'm or Dviti, 7 miles south-east from Mahmud'ābād and $4\frac{1}{2}$ or 5 miles north-west of Nadiād, on the left bank of the Sberi river, the site of an ancient capital; old lingas, Nandis, and broken statues lie about, and coins are sometimes found bearing the legend—Parama bhāṭṭāraka. (Surveyed)

- III. 2. Pati Harji. A temple built by Santarām Bāvā, who came to Nadiād in 1810 A.D. and died in 1830. It is under his disciple Chaturdās.

- III. 3. Wadāl. Temple and monastery of Svāmi Nārāyana, and seat of the southern gādi of the sect.

- III. 4. Māhādha. Tank of Pātel Talāndi, built in 1758 A.D. by Kusalji Bhukhan.

- III. 5. Alina. Mosque built about 150 years ago.

IV.—THASRA TALUKA.

- II.b. 1. Sarnal, 5 miles east from Thāsra, said to be on the site of an old city Kuntal-pura, where Rājā Chandrasen ruled 300 years ago. A temple of Galesvara Mahādeva, on the banks of the Māhi and Gulti built of stone and said to have been desecrated and the dome destroyed by Alau'd-dīn Khilji; it is much ruined, but has been a very large one: the sabha mandapa is supported by 35 well carved pillars. The gosāvi in charge has an income from Government. (Surveyed)

Close to Sarnal are Bhadrara and Aklācha also said to be on the site of part of the city of Kuntal-pura, and ancient foundations may still be traced.

- III. 2. Dakor. Temple of Ranchhōdji, built A.D. 1772 by Gopāl Jagannāth Tāmbekar, a Sātārā banker to the Peshvā, and is said to have cost a lakh of rupees. The image was brought from Dwārakā by Bodānā, a Rājput. The temple is 108 feet from east to west by 151 feet from north to south and has 8 domes and 24 śikhars of which the highest is about 60 feet.

VII.—MĀTAR TĀLUKĀ.

1. Ma'tar, 4 miles south-west from Khedā. A Śrāvaka or Jaina temple, built about 80 years ago at a cost of 4 lāks of rupees.

2. Traj, 3 miles S.S.W. from Mātar. A tumulus apparently artificial. (Surveyed)

KHAMBĀYAT OR CAMBAY STATE.

Khambāyat or Cambay. (1) The Jami Masjid is a fine mosque with 44 large and 68 small domes and numerous pillars and pilasters. It was built "in the reign of Muhammad Shāh bin Toghlak Shāh in the month of Muharram 725 A.H. (A.D. 1325) by 'Umar bin Ahmad il Kāzaruni." It measures over all 200 feet by 210 feet and its internal court 120 feet by 135 feet. "Except in being somewhat smaller in scale, its plan and arrangements are almost identical with those of the Altamsh mosque at Ajmere." The pillars are all borrowed from Jaina temples, and it has two galleries similar to those in Ahmad Shāh's mosque in Ahmadābād. The *mehrab*s are beautifully carved. (2) At the south end of the building are two marble tombs bearing beautiful Arabic inscriptions—one being that of 'Umar bin Ahmad il Kāzaruni, the builder of the mosque, who died Wednesday 9th, Safar 734 A.H., and the other that of his wife Fatima, daughter of Haja Husain il Ghilāni, who died after her husband. Over them is a fine mausoleum. "It is wholly composed of Hindu remains and is two storeys in height and was crowned with a dome 28 feet in diameter, but it fell in and is now a ruin." (Surveyed.)

Inscriptions:—One on the north entrance to the masjid; one on each tomb; one on a well in the court stating that it was made by Ali bin Abdu'n-nabi il Baghdādi in A.H. 1030; on a marble shaft lying in the north corridor of the court is one in Devanāgarī dated Samvat 1468.

III. (3) A masjid near the Tin-darwāzā bears an inscription of A.H. 1050 [or 1007?], (A.D. 1646). It has a marble arch and is supported on 32 wooden pillars.

III. (4) A Jaina temple called Chintāmani Pāravanātha or Mohai Sagotapādō in Dantar-vādā dedicated to Pāravanātha, originally built in A.D. 1598 but rebuilt at a much later date. It has inscriptions on the images both in the underground storey and the main floor. (5) The temple of Ādiśvara is another Śrāvaka temple, said to have been built by Tejapāla in 1605 A.D. (11), has also a sunken storey and image. (6) The temple of Neminātha in the Jorālāpādā; all three are built without spires, like common houses.

III. (7) About a mile from Cambay is a Muhammadan building erected in A.H. 771 (A.D. 1369-70), and dedicated to a Pir named Khāja Khezir. It has four inscriptions.

III. (8) Outside the Panla gate on the east of the town is a ṭavādi of considerable age. Nareśvara Tank outside the city on the north is a large reservoir cased with brick, with gardens and a summer house. Near it is a mosque built by one Imāmshāh of Jirana near Ahmadābād, in memory of his two children Balo and Ball, who were said to have been turned into two small heaps of flowers here.

III. (9) At Nāgari, 3 miles out, are the vestiges of the old city.

I—HAILOL TALUKA

- Ia 1 Champa nir, 30 miles north east from Baroda (1) The Jami Masjid, said to have been built by Muhammad Sháh in 1484,—but see Briggs's Ferishtah, IV 70 The words حظ و مسدور give the date 914 A H (1508 A D) It is of white sandstone beautifully cut and has minarets in front, perfect in design and taste and beautifully ornamented and said to surpass even the Jami Masjid at Ahmadábad "By the ravages of time the building has been injured in many places, but it has not yet lost its beauty" It is now quite disused (Surveyed.)
- Inscriptions —Three were on the back wall, of which the middle and most important one has been carried off
- III (2) Sakar Khán's dargáh near the Kasbin talde, with handsome dome and five pierced stone windows

IV—BROACH ZILLA

I—BROACH TALUKA

- Ib I Broach—(1) Jami Masjid in the south of the city perhaps constructed previously to the reign of Ahmad Shah, but formed almost entirely of pillars taken from earlier Hindu or Jain temples on the site of one of which it stands. It is 135 feet from north to south, and some of its details are very beautiful. The 72 pillars are carved and the stucco ceilings at the sides of the domes as well as the domes themselves are very elaborately sculptured in the Jain style,—more so than usually the case in mosques. It is used mostly as travellers' quarters by Muhammadan mendicants. Though a very fine specimen of an early mosque with domes, it is falling into a very dilapidated condition (Jour Bom B R As Soc, vol X p 19). Over the mehrab on the west wall is a modern Arabic inscription containing extracts from the Qur'an (Surveyed).
- III (2) Bawa Rahan Sihel's dargah in the Dunga suburb to the north of the city, said to have been built about the end of the 11th century, but now falling into decay. Forbes, Oriental Memoirs, vol II p 252, describes it as a "grand mausoleum" "where columns and arches form corridors, and support several large dome, and smaller cupolas richly ornamented, which cover the marble tomb".
- III (3) The Idris Mosque, built as a tomb in A.D. 1022, for Sayyid Idris near the northern wall of the town. In the south of the large area belonging to it are the tombs of some of the Nawabs of Broach. To the east of the mosque is a shed in which are tombs of several of the family of the late Fayddi of Broach. A fair is annually held here on the 3rd of the Shah Sharat holidays and Mussulmans visiting the fair and passing the night in the precincts are next morning feasted by Sayyid Husain el Idris, C.S.I., who pays the expenses from the revenues of the village of Umra in Broach taluk which he holds in indm.
- III (4) The Seth's Haveli in Lalubhai Chakla in the east of the city, built in 1791, with a front of carved wood very richly designed.
- III (5) The tomb of Chatter Pir, east of Bawa Rahan and 1½ miles north east of the city, an old Muhammadan tomb formerly famous for its cistern which it was said could not be emptied.
- III (6) The Madressa Mosque near the Civil Hospital built by Nawab Murtaza Khan in A.D. 1018. The floor is of marble as are also the bases of the pillars which are of teak. They are 30 in six rows of five each, and to the front is a verandah with a tiled roof. In the enclosure is a haw or fountain and several tombs.
- Inscriptions.—On two wooden boards fixed over a latticed window on each side of the east door are the following Persian inscriptions—

تاریخ تعمیر نواب مرتضی اسباب مرتضی خان

نا دل دردمند و سبب ریش
متأسر مقل دور اندیش

- III. Other buildings are:—(7) The Sthāna of Bhṛigu-rishi in Kalmi-wagā, outside the Jhaḍesvar gate: a plain domed temple containing 17 lingas. It is built of brick and lime with teak beams and has several dharmaśālas in the court.
- III. (8) The Sthāna of Kabīrjī in Kabīrpura. The image is in a small underground cellar having a plain domed brick temple over it. It is used by the Kabir-panṭhis.
- III. (9) Temple of Gangānātha Mahādeva in Khātrivādā, has also a linga in an underground cell. It is of brick and is said to be old, but is being rapidly destroyed by the encroachments of the Narmadā River upon it.
- III. (10) The temple of Ambājī Mātā in Kalmi-wagā built of brick and not at all old, but in decay. It has a large court containing the tombs of gosavis.
- III. (11) The temple of Pīngalesvara Mahādeva in Daśāśvamedha Thitha, is a plain brick and lime temple not a century old.
- III. (12) Lalubhāi's vāc in Dāndiā Bazār, has 10 arches and 75 stone steps, with a cell in each side wall, built of brick in the end of last century, but going to ruin.
- III. (13) Kheru'd dīn's vāc in Vejalpor, a suburb on the west of Broach, is said to be about 250 years old. The steps and cross lintels are of stone and the side walls of brick with stone pilasters and lintels to strengthen them. A passage on each side leads to a gallery below. The part nearest the well is of three storeys.
- III. (14) The Phātā-talāv vāc has nine arches, and is said to have been built by Lalubhāi Mujōmdār, and repaired about 1830 by Paraśram Tairam, a śikhār. It is of brick and the steps of Potbandar stone.
- IIa. (15) The Dutch tombs, a mile west of Vejalpor, are massive structures over the remains of members of the Dutch Factory and date from 1654 to 1770.
- III. (16) Adīśvara Bhagavān's temple in Vejalpor Patṭi, erected in 1869-70,—a Jaina temple of the Lāvā Śrīmālī, built of brick, with marble floor and carved pillars.
- III. (17) Temple of Balubharājī Mātā in Vejalpor, a plain temple, nearly washed away by the river. It contains an image of Ambājī.
- III. (18) Nāth Thoban's dharmaśāla, between the Jhaḍesvar gate and Dāndiā Bazār, was built in 1875 by a member of the Kadavā Kunhī caste, of Potbandar stone, and is three storeys high in front and richly carved.
- III. (19) Svami Nuyayy's temple on the Jhaḍesvar gate slope built on a raised platform ascended by 15 steps of Portland stone. It was built in 1877, and is of brick and plaster. It is under the Wadda high priest of the sect. It is surrounded by other buildings connected with it.
- III. (20) Temple of Somanātha Mahādeva near the Jhaḍesvar gate in what is called Old Broach, contains a linga in an underground cell over which is a plain, domed, brick temple.

- IIa. (21) Temple of Bhṛigu Bhāskareśvara in the Nāvā Dehtā, is built of brick and teak-wood by Bhāskar Rāv, a Kāmdār of Broach in the time of the Peśvās.
- IIa. (22) The temple of Bhūtānātha Mahādeva in Bhūtānātha Phalia, contains a linga in an underground cell, said to be of great age, but the temple was enlarged and partly rebuilt in 1857. It is quite a plain building.
- III. (23) Kāśī Viśvambhara Mahādeva or Mugat Gor's temple at the Bhāgākot, built in 1848 by Mugatrām Vallabhrām of the Bhūtrā Khedāvāl caste. It is a brick erection, and has a dharmasāla in the court. The linga is of a greenish stone.
- III. (24) Munisuvrata Svāmi's temple in Undi-vakhār is of stone, carved and painted; the floor is of white and black marble in alternate squares. It is a Śrāvaka or Jaina temple and was built on the site of an earlier one in 1872 by the Śrīmālī Banyās.
- III. (25) Derāsar, also in Undi-vakhār, a Jaina temple with an underground shrine and a two-storeyed brick temple above it.
- III. (26) Chovivatto temple in the Śrīmālī Pol, contains a Jaina image bearing the date Samvat 1664 (A.D. 1609). Behind the image is a recess in the wall about 3 feet by 2, containing several rows of the twenty-four Tirthankaras from which the temple takes its name.
- III. (27) Temple of Pārsvanātha in Śrīmālī pol: a plain temple of the Śāgaragachha Jains with an underground cell containing 11 white marble images. The middle image bears the inscription "Vijayasīṃha Suryādchārya pratishṭhā." Just over the cell, on the ground floor, are seven images one of which bears the inscription "Phalguna Śuddha 5, Samvat 1849, Chandragachha Nathu Kikāi Bumba bhadravit." There are also several metal images on one of which is the date "Śrāvaka Samvat 1085." The upper room contains ten images, the earliest date on them being Samvat 1844. The temple is of brick with wooden pillars.
- III. (28) The temple of Ādiśvara Bhagavān in Śrīmālī pol, an unpretending temple of the Śāgaragachha, paved with white and black marble the pillars are of teak and painted vermillion. The images are marble or brass, on the backs of the latter are the dates of their consecration, the earliest being 1199 or A.D., Samvat 1143. One of the marble images bears the date "Phalguna Śuddha 5, Samvat 1849" (A.D. 1793).
- III. (29) The Kothī or Dutch Factory near Kāśīrāvād is a large building and has been a fine one. On a sun-dial on the upper portion of the northern wall is the date Anno 1700, The west side is two storeyed.
- III. (30) Bhīdabhanjan well in Ali, a suburb on the north of Broach, belongs to the dargāh of Navāb Sultān Yār close by. In a niche in the eastern wall is an image of Hanumān which has for its pūjārī the Mūhammadan mujdar of the dargāh, who receives all the gifts made to the god.
- III. (31) Temple of Nīlakantha Mahādeva in Ali, contains the linga of the tutelary god of the Darzi or tailor caste: it possesses a revenue from a land grant.

THANA ZILLA

I—SALSETTE TALUKA

- III 1 Thana Of old Hindu or Musalmán Thana there is almost no trace. The temples and mosques praised by early travellers, were pulled down by the Portuguese (1530—1560) and their stones used for churches and other religious buildings, and most of these Christian churches and buildings were in turn destroyed by the Marithás (1737—1740). Almost the only remains of Thana before the Portuguese are the four reservoirs or ponds, Massunda, Devala, Gosala, and Haryala, all of unknown date. There are also several finely carved broken images and sculptured stones, which have been gathered in the Jail Garden, and at the Executive Engineer's Work-shops. These belonged to some old Brahminical temple. They were found in 1881, while clearing the Massunda lake of silt. There are some inscription stones in the Collector's garden. See "Mándir".
- The chief Portuguese building is the fort which is now used as a jail. It was begun by the Portuguese in 1730. There are also remains of some of their forts along the creek, and one of their churches remains, that of St John the Baptist. It is said that in order to build the church, Antonio do Porto pulled down twelve pagodas and built his church with the stones of the Hindu temples.
- II a In the English churchyard are the graves of two of the Chiefs of Salsette, viz John Halsey who died in 1785 and George Pego who died in 1794.
- III 2 Ghodbandar—Old church dedicated to St John, monasteries, and fort. The church is now a bungalow. Owing to the influence of a pau buried close by, all the efforts of the builders to construct a tower or spire are said to have failed and a Muhammadan dome was the result of their labours. A party of Sivaji's troops tried to surprise Ghodbandar when in the hands of the Portuguese in 1672, but were repulsed.
- II f 3 Borivli station on the Bombay, Hiroda and Central India Railway—at Montpezir (Mandpesvaram) all churches, watch tower, convent and caves, which have been turned into a crypt for the church dedicated to N. S. da Conceição. College for the education of orphans. Dispensary speaks of the Marithás after destroying the church carrying the timber to Thana. Over the college door is an inscription with arms of Portugal to the effect that the edifice was built in 1623 by order of Infante Dom John III of Portugal.
- II b In the patela garden are some very curiously carved memorial stones with sea fights sculptured upon them. These are set up in a row. There are 1, five large and one small. Two represent a battle upon land in which mail clad champions take part. Three are sculptured with the representation of a sea fight showing the vessels approaching, one another in line of well and red flags and all combined up together in the fight itself. (Surveyed)

- Ia 4 Kanheri Caves They are about 6 miles from Thāna and two north of the Tulsi lake, and are excavated in a great knoll of a hill situated in the midst of a large tract of forest country. There are upwards of one hundred excavations almost entirely monastic dwellings (for full description see Cave Temples of India, also J B B R A S, part I p 34 Inscriptions, Ind Ant XII 215, IX 265, XIII 133, J B B R A S part XIII p 39, part XXI pp 1 and 116, part XVI p 1 Arch. Survey Report, Vols IV and V) (Surveyed.)
- III 5 Magathāna about half a mile east of the Borivli station on the Bombay-Baroda Railway, is the site of the deserted village of Magathāna. At the foot of a mound a little to the east, is a hole or quarry, apparently old. A little further, in a black round topped rock are cut the Magathāna or Ponsar Caves, including a chapel cave on the south and a monastery cave on the north. Across the rice fields, about 300 yards to the east, a flat surface of trap, about two feet above the level of the ground, has been hollowed into an underground cistern. On the west bank of a double pond about 200 yards north of the cistern are two old Musalman tombstones, rather finely carved with hanging chains. About 300 yards to the east, on a low mound covered with grass and bushes are lying two dāgholas. To the west is a rough bush covered mound of undressed stone. A yard or two to the north hidden in thorn bushes and partly buried in the ground stands another dāghola similar to the former. About forty yards east is a small burial mound about four feet round and one foot high. Two hundred yards to the south east at the edge of the rice land, lying on the grass, is a big slab of trap, seven feet high by one foot six inches broad. At the top it is carved into a big funeral urn, while below are three belts of figures. The country round here shews distinct traces of Buddhist structural temples or monasteries. (For further information see Thāna Gazetteer, and J B B R A S, part XIII p 41) (Surveyed.)
- IIb 6 Amboli, a small village in Salsette, about two miles north west of Andheri station. The Brāhminical caves of Jogesvari or Amboli (ca 600—700) lie in the woodlands about two miles south east of Goregaon railway station. (J B B R A S part XIII p 40 Arch. Sur. Report, vol V, Cave Temples of India) (Surveyed.)
- IIa 7 Kondivte or Vāhikāli caves form two rows, one of fifteen caves on the south east face and one of four caves on the north west face of a low flat topped range of trap breccia, about four miles north east of the Andheri station. The caves are Buddhist, probably between the second and sixth centuries of the Christian era. (J B B R A S part XIII p 40, Arch. Sur. Report IV Cave Temples of India) (Surveyed.)
- IIb 8 Mandapesvara in Salsette, called Montpezier or Monpicer by the Portuguese, is about eight miles south of Bas cin and two miles north of Borivli station. For miles around it is easily known by a high whitewashed watch tower that crowns a wooded knoll. About 100 yards to the north of the watch tower, upon what was apparently a great isolated block of trap rock are the remains of a Portuguese Cathedral and College. The east face of the great mass of rock on which the buildings stand, has been cut into several Brāhminical caves. The cave has been fitted as a Portuguese Church, with a plain altar and seated wooden image of the Virgin Mary. (J B B R A S, part XIII p 11) (Surveyed.)

- III. 9. Dharavi Island, on the west of Sâlsette, at the mouth of the Bassein Creek, has, on a ridge of hill, the ruins of a large Portuguese church and the remains of a fort with a tank.
- III. 10. Versova is a small village and port on the west coast of Sâlsette, twelve miles north of Bombay. Close to it is the island of Madh with an old fort that was rebuilt by the Marâthâs.

- III. 11. Bandora.—An old aguada or fort at the Point, with the following inscription:—

ESTE BALVAR

TE. SEFESEM

LOVOR. DONO

ME. DEIESVS

EM. 1640.

According to Da Cunha, the Portuguese fleets supplied themselves with water here. There are a number of old Roman Catholic churches about Sâlsette, many of which were destroyed when the Marâthâs conquered the island in 1738.

12. Chembur or Chemur, on the north-west of Bombay Island, is believed to be the Saimur of the Arab writers, the Sibor of Kosmas Indikopleustes, the Chamula of the Kanheri cave inscriptions, the Symulla of the author of the Periplus of the Erythrean Sea, the Symulla or Timulla of Ptolemy, and perhaps the Perimula of Pliny.

13. Bha'ndap: copper-plate grant, Ind. Ant. V. 276.

II.—KALYÂN TALUKÂ.

- III. 1. Kalyân. There are, at Kalyân, the Shenâle lake, said to have been built in 1505, the tomb of Mohatabar Khân, the minister of Shâh Jahân, who was sent in disgrace to Kalyân when Aurangzib usurped his father's throne, and twelve mosques of which seven are in use and five in ruins. Of these buildings the most interesting are Mohatabar Khân's tomb on the east bank of the Shenâle lake, and the graceful Kâlî Masjid at the south-west corner of the same lake. A life-sized image of Vishnu set up on the left side of the road leading from the station to the town.
- III. 2. Bâwa Malang, near Kusiwâli village; old fort, and two plain cells. Hill fort, Muhammadan shrine, and another called Pâlli. Information scanty.
- III. 3. Ambarnâth Village.—Temple of Ambarnâtha, a fine temple of the style of the 11th century (A.D. 1060). Though small it is richly carved and of great interest as a good type of its age. Festival held on the Sivarâtri in Mâgha (Ind. Ant. III. 316). (Surveyed)

Inscription of the Śilāhâra dynasty in the temple, dated Śāla 982, A.D. 1060. (J.B.E. R.A.S. vol. IX. p. 219).

III.—MURBĀD TĀLUKĀ.

- III. Pula Sonala, at the foot of the Nānāghāf, about twenty miles east of Murbād, has several plain Brāhmanical caves. They are situated on a scarp a little way up the hill-side and have a westerly aspect. They are very recent and very poorly cut, only one having any pretensions to rank as a cave, the remainder being rough cells much broken and dilapidated. There are a few figures in bas-relief, but no good architectural details. (Surveyed.)

IV.—BASSEIN TĀLUKĀ.

- II a. 1. Bassein or Wasai.—Fine fort and old Portuguese churches with inscriptions: well-known. Copper-plate grant, Ind. Ant. XII. 119.
- III. 2. Nirmal.—Temples and tanks. Pilgrimage here in the cold weather, in the month of Kārtika. Jatrā on 11th Kārtika. The Portuguese or rather the Inquisition pulled down the temple and desecrated the tirtha and caused the linga of Śiva to disappear. On the Marāthās taking possession of Bassein, Nirmal was again purified, a tank constructed, and temples built.
- III. 3. Jivdhan Hill, about a mile east of the Virār station on the Bombay-Baroda Railway, has on its top ruins of fortifications visible from the railway, and within the fortifications some very old-looking caves and cisterns said to be the work of the Pāndavas. Throughout the fair season people, especially barren women from the surrounding villages, go to the caves to make offerings to an invisible deity, who is believed to have fled from a niche in one of the caves at the touch of a Mahār.
- III. 4. Tungār Hill.—Tanks, Tongesvara. Temple half way up the hill with carved stones.
- II b. 5. Pēlar.—Temple and two large stones, with long inscriptions.
- III. 6. Pārol, a village on the east base of Tungār Hill, lies about eight miles east of Virār Station on the Baroda Railway. It has the remains of four old Hindu temples. At none of these four temples is worship now performed. The two Pārol temples, called the temples of the Big and Little Pools, Mothā Tānkya and Lahān Tānkya, stand on the southern and northern banks of a stream which runs down the steep side of Tungār. The Lahān Tānkya temple is about half a mile west of Pārol village. It is levelled to the ground which is strewn with carved stones. The Big Pool or Mothā Tānkya temple, about half a mile further up the stream bed, is better preserved. Of the two in the limits of the village of Majavli, one, not more than a few hundred yards south-west of the village site of Pārol, seems to have been the largest of the group. Its superstructure is gone, only the plinth and some of the steps remain. The stones and large blocks that lie about are finely cut, though not so well chiselled as the Ambarnātha stones.
- III. 7. Ma'ndvi, below the northern spur of Tungār hill, and fifteen miles north east of Bassein, lies on the old trade route from Sojāra up the Tānca valley to the Tal pass. It has a picturesque ruined convent and a Portuguese fort. Among the inscribed stones in the Collector's garden at Thānā there is one from Māndvi. It records a grant by a Śālāhāra king but is much worn and hard to read.

- III. 8. Ta'nsa River.—Along the banks here and there are carved stones.
- III. 9. Kamandarg, in Kāman village, about 10 miles east of Mānikpur: an old hill fort.
- III. 10. Agā'shi is a town and port about 10 miles north of Bassein. Though now of little consequence Agā'shi is probably an old timber trade and ship-building centre. In 1530, though poor in buildings, it had a rich timber trade, and built ships as good as Portuguese ships able to make the voyage to Europe.
- III. 11. Arnala, an island fort off the coast opposite Agā'shi, also called Janjira or the island. Among North Konkan coast-forts it ranked next to Bassein in size and strength. It was taken from the Gujarāt Musalmāns by the Portuguese about 1530, and was taken by the Marāthās about 1737, and, according to a Marāthi inscription over the northern gateway, was rebuilt in the reign of Bājirāv I. in 1737, by an architect named Bāji Tulāji.
12. Sopāra, a village about 37 miles north of Bombay and three and a half miles south-west of Virār Station. The Sopāra of Ptolemy, the Sopāra of the Periplus Subāra of the early Arab voyagers, and the Surpāraka of the Cave inscriptions. There is a village close by in Māhim bearing a very similar name, Saphala, but it never seems to have been a place of note. For a full account of the discovery of a Buddhist stūpa here with its excavation and finding of relics see a paper by the late Pandit Bagvānlāl Indrajī in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1882, (Surveyed.)
- III. 13. Korbao. Old Portuguese Fort.

IV.—BHIVANDI TALUKĀ.

- III. 1. Gutara (Dugād Village).—Fort and tanks.
- III. 2. Vadavli.—There is a celebrated modern temple here of Vajrabāi with six inām villages granted by Government for its support, where a pilgrimage is held in Chaitra.
- III. 3. Lonad.—A small old temple of Mahādeva of the style of Ambarnātha. Also a cave with some sculptures, but it is doubtful whether they are Hindu or Buddhist. (Ind. Ant. IV. 65; Arch. Sur. Report, vol. V.) (Surveyed.)
- III. 4. Bhivandi.—A beautiful tomb of Husain Shāh (Ind. Ant. IV. 65).
- III. 5. Ganes'apuri.—Some sculptures of an old temple (Ind. Ant. IV. 67), Temple of Bhīmesvara Mahādeva with five or six hot springs.
- III. 6. Bhivandi.—Varala Tank. The legend runs that the tank was dug to a certain depth but would not hold water. It occurred to a man in a dream that the tank awaited the sacrifice of a man and his wife within its area, that the said man having proceeded with his wife to the site of the tank during the night touched a large boulder in it. The tank was instantaneously filled with water and they were drowned in it. Latterly it has been enlarged by the Municipality of the town and the Bhivandi water-supply is obtained from it.
- III. 7. Aklohi.—Fine temple of Mahādeva and five hot springs much resorted to.

VI—SHAHIPUR TALUKA

- III 1. Atgaon—Remains of an old temple
- III 2. Vibigaon—Old fort close to Reversing Station and past Kistara Station, Great Indian Peninsula Railway
- III 3. Mahuli—On the summit of a most striking mountain are the remains of a fine old fort in two of the gate bastions are caves with some Hindu and Muhammadan remains, and inscriptions. The only Hindu inscription is on a Sati stone, first line illegible, 2nd "Sri Padmavati Sati". Two Muslim inscriptions on the algah, one fallen and the other in situ. Four more picked up lying about are now in charge of Mulla Shahpur. When Jijibai Sivaji's mother, was fleeing from the Muhammadan troops from 1633 to 1636, she with her young son frequently took refuge in this fort. In 1670 Moro Tirola, the Peshwa or Prime Minister of Sivaji sustained a repulse at this fort from the Moghal troops with reported loss of 1,000 men. After a siege of two months, the fort, however, surrendered to him.
- III 4. Mokhada Peta, Bhopatgad.—Kurlot village, old fort, and tanks
- III 5. Vashali in Mokhada a rock cut temple called Vire, situated on the north slope of a small hill. It was blocked up for about 3 to 4 feet with earth which has been excavated at the expense of the late Mr. Gibson, in the hope of a kunda being found. The inner space is nearly square, about 12 x 12. The height about 6' 6". In the rock facing the door on either side of a niche are two images each about 3 high. They appear to have very large ears, and with their arms and hands by their sides are in the attitude of "attention". One has his sign of sex clearly shown, the other not. Over the lintel is a small broken image. There is a porch roofed with stone slabs held up on two pillars, squared, and having the angles cut off in portions. There is in front of these pillars a small enclosure, perhaps 3 feet or 4 feet from them, with walls of rock on either side, and a doorway through two little parapet like walls 3 or 4 feet high. It is not much of a temple or cave in itself, but its locality makes it important. It appears to be Jain.

VII—MIRAJ TALUKA

- III 1. Kelve and Sirgion—Old forts
- III 2. Asheri—Asheri Fort described by Gemelli Careri. Besides being seated on the top of a hill where there is no higher ground to command it, a crooked path cut out of the mountain along which two men cannot go abreast lead up to it and is defended by several guards who might withstand an army by only rolling down stones placed there for the purpose. Dickenson described it after the Marathas had held it 80 years as accessible only at one point and of such natural strength that with a handful of men to defend it it might justly be considered impregnable. The latter part of the ascent is up an almost perpendicular staircase (with a precipice of several hundred feet immediately below it) hewn out of the solid rock, forty feet higher (Dr Cunha's Bassein, page 206).

- III 3 Kaldrug, P'ndulvâdi and Tak Mak.—Old forts
- III 4 Tarapur.—Old fort repaired by the Mughls in European style
- III 5 Pa'rgaon.—A gadda kano or curious boundary mark with donkey and woman

VIII—VADA TALUKA

- III 1 Koj.—Fine hill fort and tanks
- III 2 Ganj.—A temple of Śil Bhāgavātmī, tank and ruins
- III 3 Tilse.—Temple and sacred pool in islet in Vanturpī river Pilgrimage in hot weather
- III 4 Vada.—Remains of temples and tanks, an inscription discovered here of the Śilāhār dynasty, is in the Bombay Asiatic Society's Museum

IX—DANAV TALUKA

- III 1 Mahalakshmi.—Very peculiar and conspicuously shaped hill Shrine very holy and a pilgrimage to it in March
- III 2 Gumburgad.—Vishāl village, a very large hill fort
- III 3 Segva.—Shushne village an old hill fort
- III 4 Chikle.—Fort Anquetil Duperron 1760, says this was repaired to protect inhabitants from pirates
- III 5 Dahanu and Umbargaon.—Old forts
- III 6 Barat Hill.—Kondvareh village—fort and tanks
- III 7 Sanjan.—Fort this place is that to which Pārsī fire was originally brought by PARSIS
- III 8 Indurgad.—Karambeli village fort
- III 9 Katalwara.—An old fort perpendicular staircase (with a precipice of several hundred feet immediately below it) hewn out of the solid rock, forty feet higher. (Da Cunha's Bassein, page 206.)

- III. 3. Kaldrug, Tãndulvãdi and Tak Mak.—Old forts.
- III. 4. Tãrãpur.—Old fort repaired by the Marãthas in European style.
- III. 5. Pãrgaon.—A gadda karao or curious boundary mark with donkey and woman.

VIII.—VãDA TãLEKã.

- III. 1. Koj.—Fine hill fort and tanks.
- III. 2. Gunj.—A temple of Sãt Bhãrgavarãma, tank and ruins.
- III. 3. Tilse.—Temple and sacred pool in islet in Vaitarna river. Pilgrimage in hot weather.
- III. 4. Va'da.—Remains of temples and tanks; an inscription discovered here, of the Shãhãrã dynasty, is in the Bombay Asiatic Society's Museum.

IX.—DãHãNU TãLEKã.

- III. 1. Mahalakshmi.—Very peculiar and conspicuously shaped hill. Shrine very holy and a pilgrimage to it in March.
- III. 2. Gumbirgad.—Vihãli village, a very large hill fort.
- III. 3. Segva.—Shãhane village, an old hill fort.
- III. 4. Chikle.—Fort. Anquetil Duperron, 1760, says this was repaired to protect inhabitants from pirates.
- III. 5. Dãhãnu and Umbargaon.—Old forts.
- III. 6. Barãt Hill.—Kondkireh village,—fort and tanks.
- III. 7. Sanjan.—Fort, this place is that to which Pãrsã fire was originally brought by Pãr-sis.
- III. 8. Indargãl.—Karambeli village, fort.
- III. 9. Katalwara.—An old fort.

III—SOUTHERN DIVISION.

I—BELGAUM TALUKA

1 Belgaum—(15° 51'; 74° 35') The fort to the east of the town is said to have been built in A D 1519. In it are Asad Khān's dargāh or Masjid Safi, no longer used, and two Jain temples of the 12th or 13th century, described in the first Archæological Report (Ind Ant IV 138) (Surveyod).

Inscriptions—One, in Persian, in a recess to the north of the main gate, is dated A D 937 (A D 1530); another is over the entrance of the Masjid Safi—"in the time of Adil Ayon who utterly uprooted the unbelievers from the country of the Dakhan," an inscription in the south-east part of the fort relates to the rebuilding of a portion of the wall in A D 1013 (A D 1633-34), a fourth (of A D 1643) is built into the front wall of the library, which was formerly the Kutubkhāna's house, and a fifth, much effaced, is on the right side of the west gate. (See First Archæological Survey Report) Also there were formerly, somewhere in the fort, two Raṭṭa tablets dated Sila 1126 or 1127, but they have been removed from Belgaum, and it is not known where they are now (Elliot MS Coll vol II pp 571 and 576, Jour. Bom D R A S vol X p 184, Ind. Ant IV 6).

2 Sandi, 9 miles W N W. from Belgaum, hill-fort of Mahipatgaḍ.

3 Kalvide, 17 miles west from Belgaum, hill fort of Kalāndhigod.

4 Koraji, 19 miles W N W. from Belgaum, hill fort of Gondharvogaḍ.

5 Pargad, hill fort, 32 miles west by south from Belgaum.

6 Chandgaḍ, 22 miles west from Belgaum (15° 56', 74° 15'). A temple of Revolānātha about 100 feet long by 38 wide.

Inscription—A Persian one.

II—BIDRI TALUKA.

1 Talwarkop, on the Malaprabhā, 4 miles west of Kādareji and 3 miles south west of Hulbi. A small but very old temple of Samkarasūtagadeva in the bed of the river, ascribed to Jakhapāchārya.

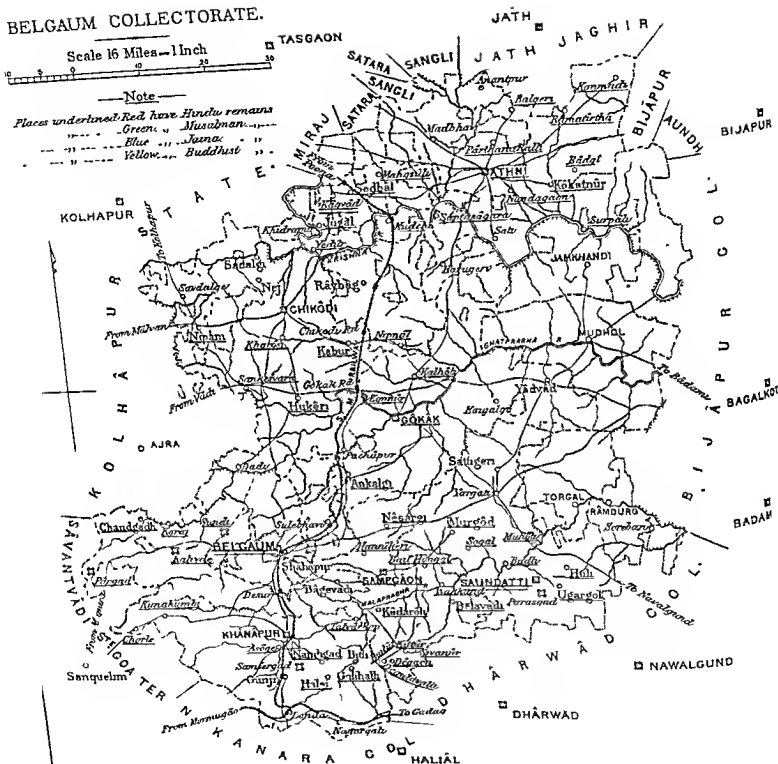

2 Nandgaḍ,—20 miles south from Belgaum (15° 33'; 74° 36'). 1½ miles west of the town on a hill called Samsergaḍ is an old plain temple of Tateśvara, ascribed to Jakhapāchārya. An old and typical Jain temple in the jungle with fine carving.

Behind this temple is a very large rock on which is an unfinished carving of a figure 25 feet long, and an inscription partially effaced; also a slab with a short inscription; (6) in the wall of a Jaina basti, Śaka 824, see J. D. B. R. A. S., vol. X. page 167; (7) in the Jaina basti, Śaka 975; (8) in the Hiri-basti, Śaka 1197; (9) on a pillar in the same Hiri-basti, Śaka.....; (10) in the wall of the house of Gaṇāchārya, Śaka 1092; (11) two (effaced) at the temple of Peṭi-Basappa, Śaka 1129; (12) on a pillar in the maṭha of Andanasvāmi, Śaka 1146; (13) on another pillar in the same maṭha, Śaka 1146; (14) at the door of Kāla Bhairava's temple is a stone with 7½ lines of inscription, and another carved one, a huge Bhairava inside; (15) at the temple of Kumbheśvara is a stone sunk in the earth and inscription on it; (16) in the court of the temple of Siddheśvara to the left of the entrance on a narrow stone, rudely cut; (17) at the descent to a dry talāw is part of an old, distinctly out, inscription half-buried.
3. Soratur, 2 miles E.N.E. from Sirhatti, and 6 miles E.S.E. from Mulgund.
- I b. Inscriptions:—(1) On the left of the god in the temple of Virabhadra, Śaka 873; (2) in the Jaina basti, Śaka 993; (3) in the temple of Īśvara, Śaka 1013; (4) at the temple of Mallesvara, Śaka 1029; (Ind. Ant. XII. 256.).
- III. 4. Hosur, 4 miles E.N.E. from Mulgund. Temple of Kallavasaveśu is old, with sculptures on its walls. There are also three other old temples in the village rapidly falling into decay.
- I b. Inscriptions:—One, dated Śaka 1129, Prabhava Samvatsara, records a grant by Yadava Ballāla Nārāyaṇadeva. There are also others.

and dated Śaka 1115. It is in 56 lines, extremely well preserved, and has been copied and translated by J. F. Fleet, Esq., C.S. (Ind. Ant., vol. II. pp. 298-311); (3) contains 32 lines, chipped in places, but fairly well preserved. It is a grant of the great chieftain Sābhana or Sūbhana under Āhavanamalladeva in Śaka 981; (4) consists of 15 lines, with many flaws in the tablet; it is dated in the 25th year of king Tribhuvanamalladeva, i.e. Śaka 1023. These four inscriptions (and 3 others) stand up against the back wall of the temple; (5) was found by Mr. Fleet lying on the edge of a small tank outside the temple enclosure, and placed against the outer side of the north wall of the temple court. It consists of 57 lines, and records a grant in Śaka 1121, the Siddhārthi Sainatsara by the chieftain Rāyadeva under the Hoysala king Viraballālladeva; (6) is half-buried in the back wall of a house adjoining the southern or back wall of the temple court; it is in tolerably good preservation, and belongs to the time of Sankamadeva of the Kolachūri family (Śaka 1093 to 1104); (7) against the back wall of the temple is in Nāgarī characters, but is broken about the 20th line. The top of another lies on the ground; (8) also in the same place, is of the time of Tribhuvanamalladeva. These inscriptions are worth removing, cleaning, and translating; (9) stands just inside the western gateway of the temple court. It consists of 14 lines, and is dated Śaka 1461, in the reign of Achyutmahārāya (A.D. 1520-1542); (10) is a very short one, which perhaps has the name of the builder, on the outside of the garbhagriha or shrine, in an angle; (11) leans against the western wall of the courtyard of the temple of Nārāyaṇadeva, and is a very long one of 72 or 73 lines each of about 63 letters, much worn away; (12) stands against the eastern wall; has Krishna and the gopīs at the top; and consists of 69 lines each of about 42 letters, partly worn in the centre, (13) on a stone built into the lower part of the compound wall behind the temple of Virā-Nārāyaṇa, Śaka 959; (14) on another stone in the same wall, higher up and further to the south, short, and partially effaced; (15) on the roof of a room in or at the same temple, Śaka 1020; (16) at the same temple, Śaka 1461; (17) in the enclosure to the north of the same temple, Śaka 1022; (18) at the temple of Narasimha, on the south of the temple of Virā-Nārāyaṇa, Śaka 1461; (19) at the small dharmaśālā east of the southern gateway behind the temple of Narasimha, on the bases of two pillars (some lines have been hewn out), Śaka 1016, (20) four lines on a pilaster in the old gateway between the temple of Trihātāsvara and the street; (21) one in Devanagari lying on its face on the margin of the talav. (Ind. Ant. II. 298; B. B. R. A. S. Jour. XXVII. 321.)

9. Betgeri, 2 miles north-east from Gadag. (Surveyed)

- 1 b. Inscriptions.—A śrīgal on the land of Hatagāra Mallārāya. Kilkā Sainatsara; also inscriptions upon several memorial stones which with others are clustered together in a walled enclosure in the village. These are elaborately carved.

10. Sirur, 4 miles south-east from Gadag.

- 1 b. Inscriptions.—(1) Near the south gate of the temple of Toranagalla-Brahmadeva, Śaka 962; (2) on a pillar in the same temple, Śaka 961; (3) at the gate called Kuruvā, galagasi, Śaka 970. (4) in front of the door or gate of the temple of Maṇigī-Devāsar, Śaka 1195.

11. Hombal, 7 miles north-west from Gadag

- Inscriptions.—(1) In the temple of Isvara, Śaka 971; (2) on the south of the well near the temple of Bhogeshalinga, Śaka 1037.

sovereignty. These, however, are cunningly mixed with southern details in the upper part of the building.

"The sculpture and architectural details of this temple are of much more minute delicacy of finish than those of the temples of" Dambal and Chaudadapur, "but are neither so rich nor so freely drawn as in those of the temples of Hulabid and Belur. On the other hand, something may be owing to the temple having been originally erected by the Jains for their own religion, and its style may consequently be imported, while those dedicated to Śiva may be more indigenous. These, however, are questions which can only be settled on the spot by those who will take the trouble to learn all the variations through which the style passed during the time it was practised in that country."

All the temples here are being rapidly destroyed by trees on the roofs, and by the materials and sculptures being carried off for building purposes. (Surveyed.)

I B.

Inscriptions:—These are numerous: (1) one near Kanur Bhāvi, dated Śaka 790, is used by dhobi, to beat their clothes upon; (2) on the left of the god in the door of the Jain basti, Śaka 1004; (3) one in a field belonging to Madivnlaya Patri; (4) in the temple of Someśvara in the garden land of the Patriyavarn on the west of the fort, Śaka 1010; (5, 6) a little to the south are two Jaina slabs the inscriptions on which are nearly obliterated; (7) on the north of the same temple of Someśvara, Śaka 1097; (8) in the temple of Viśvanātha, dated Śaka 790; (9) four lines on a beam in the madhyaraṅga of the temple of Nanneśvara near Hire-Mūḥa, Śaka 1108; (10) on the base of a pillar in the same—one line on three sides; (11) sunk in the earth, north of the same temple, a slab with an apparently legible inscription—(should be removed to a place of safety); (12) in field No. 13, Revenue Survey; (13-15) three in the temple of Mallikārjuna; (16) near the temple of Annamān in the bazar,—much defaced; (17) on a beam in the east part of the madhyaraṅga in the temple of Chaudrannulīśvara in the fort, Śaka 1106; (18, 19); on two more beams in the same place, Śaka 1106; (20) lying under a tamarind tree on the north of the fort, Śaka 1038; (21) in the temple of Nāgadeva in the village, Śaka 1012, (22) under a nam tree on the spot on which a potter attending on the god Māṇikeśvara lived, Śaka 1015, (23) on a beam in the madhyaraṅga of the temple of.....Śaka 1096; (24) at the temple of Māṇikeśvara near the well called, "Musukina-bhāvi" near some garden land outside the village, 21 lines on the bases of two pillars in the porch, Śaka 1163; (25) on a stone called "Samādhi-kallā" at Kāśivīśveśvara, Śaka 1120; (26, 27) two large slabs built into the left wall in the temple of Virabhadra; (28) built, face downwards into a wall facing the well in the fort; (29) on the porch of the same well; (30) near the temple of Śvara in the fort; (31) near the Viṇḍivana of Amanna Putra Goviodappa; (32) one in the temple of Ganeś near the school-house; (33) to the east of the fort under a tamarind tree in Rev. Sur. No. 275; (34) two lines on a stone outside the temple of Virabhadra; (35) at the door of the temple of Gokarṇeśvara—partly peeled off.

II B. 14. Doni, 7 miles south of Lakkundi and 3½ miles west from Dambal; inscriptions.

15 Dambal, 13 miles S.E. from Gadag and 16 south-west from Ittagi (lat. 15° 18', long. 75° 50'). Temples of Someśvara and Doddā Basappa are outside the town, and both much injured. The latter "has the merit," Mr. Fergusson notes, "of presenting us with the form of one of the vimānas of the style in a very complete state of preservation."

* The temple has always been Brahmanical, not Jaina. Editor

It never, however, was entirely finished, all the smaller string courses of the roof being still left in block, though the effect of this is as sparkling as if they had been finished to the extent originally intended. Assuming it to be finished it would not be easy to point to a more graceful form of roof for the cellar of a temple. At first sight it may, of course, appear somewhat strange and outre, but with a little familiarity its form gains rapidly on the judgment of the architectural critic' (Surveyed)

- III Totadavami Matha is a large modern building of black stone outside the town, on the Gadag Mundargi road. Over the tomb of Totadavami is a stone lotus a specimen of good workmanship of its kind. The pillars are hewn in imitation of the turned ones of older times, and the door is carved with a pattern in very low relief. A door into a side cloister was brought from Lakkunli about 20 years ago and inserted here, the Lakshmi being hewn into a linga and the elephants left. The head of the matha is Adanavami, and under it are mathas in most of the villages near Dambal, all possessed of lands (B R R A S Journ, part XXVII p 321)

- I b Inscriptions —(1) At the temple of Doddâ Basavanna, outside the village, is an inscription of Someśvara Tribhuvanamalla dated Śāla 1106, Krodhî Sunnatana (P. 8 and O O Insc No 102) (2) on the left the small basti in the fort, in excellent preservation, 451 lines, Śāla 1017, (3) two on the pillars at the entrance of the temple of Kileśvara, (4) a fine one has been built into the wall of the well close by and nearly buried (Ind Ant, X. 185)

16 Alawandi, 8 miles east by north from Mundargi

- I b Inscriptions —(1) On the right of the image in the temple of Išvārî, dated Śāla 960, (2) on the same position, Śāla 1124 (c) near the kūṭa belonging to Venkanagunda, Śāla 983

- I b 17 Ittagi, in Nizam's territory, the temple referred to above (No 137) with an inscription in the temple of Madēśa Nūga in the fort dated Śāla 1034 (Surveyed)

- I b 18 Kukkanur, 1 miles north by east from Ittagi. Here there are several old temples of the style of the temple of Virupikṣhî at Pattadakal the principal among them being those of Kalleśvara and Virālōga. Lying outside the town on the west are the remains of a lofty column with a short inscription round its shaft. The remains in and around the town show evidence of great antiquity (Surveyed)

- II Inscriptions —(1) In the temple of Nava Siddha, within the western wall of the enclosure of the temple of Viṣṇu dāyî, śāla 92—this name is obliterated, (2) in the same temple of Nava Siddha, this is a much longer inscription than No I bottom of stone containing the date is said to be broken away, (3) in the temple of Mahamayi, Śāla 1071, (4) on the left of the god in the temple of Mahamayi, Śāla 1109, (c) on the right hand outside the gate of the temple of Mahamayi śāla 1078, (6) on the right hand of the god in the temple of Kalleśvara on the west of the village, Śāla 1049, (7) on the left of the god in the temple of Mahikarjuna, śāla 1025, (c) on the right of the god in the same temple, śāla 1022

19. Kotavummachigi, 1 1/2 miles north east from Gadag (lat 15° 33, long 75° 59)

26. Kakod, on the Tungabhadra, 1½ miles from Hesarūr.

- II b. Inscription:—In the court of the temple of Māruti, of 32½ lines, mostly in good preservation.

VII.—BANKĀPUR TĀM KĀ.

- III. 1. Sa'balur, (?) 8 miles west of Bankāpur and 7 miles east of Mundagod (lat. 11° 57' N., long. 75° 12'). Temple of Išvara.

- I b. Inscriptions:—(1) At the temple of Išvara on the north of the village, Śaka 1033; (2) at the same temple, Śaka 1037.

- III. 2. Hungund, 3 miles S.S.E. from Sābal. A broken inscription.

3. Nidgundi, 5 miles west of Bankāpur.

- I b. Inscriptions:—(1) In the court of the house Andāniganda, 2 ft. by 2 ft.; (2) in the field Survey No. 57, 3' by 1' 9"; (3) in Survey No. 58, 4' 9" by 2'; (4) in the same, 4 ft. by 1½ ft.; (5) in Survey No. 84, 2 ft. by 1½ ft.

- I a. 4. Bankāpur, (lat. 14° 55', long. 75° 20'). Fine, large old temple of Raṅgasvāmi, usually called Aravattukhaṇḍa-basti or temple of the sixty columns, partially ruined, and a good deal buried in rubbish. It is built of polished stone, and the walls are carved with figures. The roof has an octagonal dome in the centre. "The form of the pillars, and more so the encircling wall which surrounds them, are simple and uniform to a degree very seldom found in buildings of this class in this part of the country. Except the form of the cornice, the whole looks exceptional, and partakes more of the northern style than of the wild exuberance of the South." * "It may be remembered, perhaps, that when king Firuz Shāh Bāhmāni invaded the Vijayanagar dominions in 1406, he demanded the daughter of the Rājā of that kingdom in marriage, with the fort of Bankapur as dowry; and eventually, when Vijayanagar had been reduced to sore straits obtained both, Bankapur had previously belonged exclusively to the Hindus, and on account of the rich districts dependent upon it, and its valuable local produce, was a much desired possession. It was, therefore, surrendered only under circumstances of great distress. Henceforward, it continued subject to the Muhammadans, and was dependent upon Belgaum." The greatest damage to this temple was done by the Muhammadans when they defaced the sculpture and turned the great hall into a masjid.

II. The temple of Siddheswara is smaller and not so old. It is built of black stone with three doors on the east side, and has some carved figures on the wall. The roof is supported by eight pillars. Indian lands belong to the temple, and the Dāst of Hindigumr supports the priest and executes the repairs. (Surveyed)

III. Inscriptions—(1) Learning against a wall to the right of the east entrance to the fort is a large old dsuna of 59 lines each of about 37 letters, in old Kanarese. For the most part it is in fine order, but the 11th line has been deliberately cut out and almost entirely obliterated, and there are fissures in the tablet, which would probably result in its falling to pieces if an attempt were made to remove it to a safer place of custody. The emblems at the top of the tablet have been wilfully defaced, but traces of them can be made out. The inscription is dated Śaka 977 (A.D. 1055-56), while the Cholekya king Gangaperranah Vikramāditya II—the son of Trailokyamalla II, the supreme lord of the city of Kavalbhupura, the lord of Nandavara, he whose crest was an infuriated elephant,—was ruling the Gahgavahat ninety-six thousand and the Bannavasi twelve thousand and while the great chieftain, the glory of the family of the Kadamba emperor Mayasarama was governing the Bannavasi twelve thousand as his subordinate. It records a grant of land to a Jaina temple by Harikeśhadeva, his wife Sicheladevi, the re-embodiment of the five religious colleges of Bankapur, the guild of the Nagara, maheyanas and 'The Sixteen'.

(2, 3) On the wall to the left of the south entrance to the shrine of the Avastubhambadribasti of Nagareswara are short and very well preserved old Kanarese inscriptions—the one apparently a repetition of part of No. 1, the other is not dated and contains of six lines of poetry, each line containing about 23 letters, and 2 letters over in the 7th line. The verses are in praise of a certain Simha or Singa.

(4-7) In the interior of the same temple there are three inscriptions let into the wall on the right of the shrine door, and one on the left. No. 4 the uppermost on the right, contains 39 lines of about 12 letters each, recording a grant to the god Narakeswara, the one apparently a repetition of part of No. 1, the other is not dated and contains of six lines of poetry, each line containing about 23 letters, and 2 letters over in the 7th line. The verses are in praise of a certain Simha or Singa. No. 5, under it, is of 16 lines of about 23 letters each, and records a grant made the same year by a private person. No. 6 the lowest, has 12 lines of about 27 letters each, and records a grant made by an official in the reign of Trailokyamalla (Vikramāditya II, Śaka 1013). No. 7, on the left, has 37 lines of about 16 letters each, and records a grant to the Jaina temple of Kaval-Bankapur in the 15th year of king Vikrama (Śaka 1012) (In I. A. S. I. V. 201 and V. 201-3).

VIII — HANGAL TALUKA

1 Hangal, (lat 14° 40' N, long 75° 11' E), the ancient Pinungri Temple of Tārakesvara belonging to the Smārta is a very large and elegant one built of black granite and the walls carved with mythological sculpture Tradition ascribes it to Vīra Ballāla (about A D 1192 1211) 'The roof of the temple has been thoroughly church wardened in modern times and so covered with plaster that it is impossible to say what its original form may have been, but as Colonel M Taylor remarks 'it serves to protect the interior, which is in perfect preservation In one part of the temple (the sabha mandapa) is the celebrated Padma or lotus of Hāngal a solid octagonal stone nearly thirty feet in diameter, carved in the form of a lotus flower, and supported by eight neatly sculptured columns It seems impossible to recount for the manner in which this great mass of rock was lifted up and placed in its present position' The roof of the porch is supported by pillars, with the lotus dome in the centre The doorway of the detached temple, though similar in design to those of the temple at Lakkundi, shows a strong tendency towards the border style of decoration which was employed by the Ballāla architects at Halebid and elsewhere' For plan and elevation of the temple see Ind Ant IV 205, V. 179 (J B B R A S I N 330) (Surveyed)

It has comparatively little figure sculpture about it, but it is fully decorated with other ornament. The outer side of the parapet wall of the hall is very effectively decorated with an endless repetition of miniature *śikhara*s. The three porches of the hall have rather pretty ceilings with very chaste-looking rosette centres. (Surveyed.)

- I b. Inscriptions:—(1) One on a pillar inside the temple of Śānteśvara of 13 lines; (2) one, 7 feet by $3\frac{1}{2}'$, outside the temple, on the south, of the Yādava king Simhaya, dated Śaka 1860, Thursday, 3rd Phālguna Suddha (P. S. and O. C. 2. Asuodi, 5 miles west of Rānebennur.

- 1b. Inscriptions:—(1) At the temple of Kalleśvara, outside the village, dated Śaka 1034; (2) near the same temple, Śaka 1065; (3) another, much obliterated.

3. Ukund, 3 miles south of Kadarmandalgi. At the temple of Kāleśvara is an old Kānarese inscription slab 5 feet high by $2\frac{1}{2}$ broad. Śankara Ningapā Bājār has a copper-plate grant.

4. Harogop, 8 miles from Rānebenour (lat. $14^{\circ} 29' N.$, long. $76^{\circ} 38' E.$) Inscription of 12 lines, much effaced, near the temple of Hanumāo.

5. Beōākanakond, 3 miles north of Harogop, and 5 miles S.S.W. of Rānebenour. Temple of Kalleśvara.

1b. Inscriptions:—(1) On the south of the temple of Kalleśvara Śaka 955; (2) again on the south of the same temple, Śaka 1124; (3) on the lamp-pillar (dipada khaṇḍa) at the same temple, Śaka 1031; (4) a śiṅga below the tank, Śaka 1206

6. Rānebennur, (lat. $14^{\circ} 37' N.$, long. $75^{\circ} 42' E.$) The dargāh of Hazrat Jamal Shāh Wali was rebuilt about 30 years ago by Amio Shāh Husaini alijā. Kamalshāh Husaini at a cost, it is said, of only Rs. 5,000. The roof is supported by 40 stone pillars and numerous wooden ones. Jamal Shāh is said to have led to one halter a mouse, a cat, a dog, a stag, a snake, and a mongoose, one not molesting another; and he wore baggies up to his elbows. These were among his titles to sanctity. There is a great scene at the dargāh during Muharram. Three miles north-east is a circle of upright stones, in the jungle. (Surveyed)

1b. Inscriptions:—One near the dipamāla pillar at the temple of Siddheśvara is dated Śaka 1411 Śivhārāja Jyeshtha Vadya 5th, and contains the names of some of the Vijayanagar kings.

7. Harihar is 14 miles south-east from Rānebennur. There is here a large black stone temple of Hari-Hara with numerous inscription slabs. (Surveyed) (See P. S. and O. C. Inscriptions Nos 17, 22, 116-135; Ind. Ant., IV. 327, 329; V. 362; Copper-plate Grant, VII. 168, 301; J. B. B. R. A. S., Vol. IX. p. 327.)

8. Hire Bidari, 8 miles north of Harihar on the Tungabhadra, has an old temple and three inscriptions, one dated Śaka 1205, in 50 lines.

9. Gundagadāpur or Devargad, 6 miles north of Rānebennur. Temple of Mallāra liṅga or Khandobā of great celebrity in all the surrounding districts. It is built of black stone, polished; the roof is supported by 20 pillars, of which 4 are round and the rest square. The outer walls are ornamented with carved figures, but the spire is of brick. There is a great annual fair on the 9th of Āśvina Suddha, when self-torture is practised by devotees; &c., to the present time. The temple is supported by māra hands. Near it is a temple to Khandobā's wife Mālābātī, or Ganga Malavā, and six (?) other minor temples.

10. Chandaḍampur, or Pura, 13 miles north of Rānebennur (lat. $14^{\circ} 47' N.$, long. $76^{\circ} 43' N.$) Temple of Mukteśvara of black stone. The temple here is "less graceful than that at Dambal, but it is a fine, bold temple of the same age and style, with all its details more completely finished than they are in that example. As a design, its principal defects are the form of its dome, and the insignificance of its crowning member (the kalāśa), which is much too small for its position. In these respects it forms a very marked contrast with the Dambal example, where these parts are in as perfect proportion to the other parts of the design as in any example in the country. (J. B. B. R. A. S., Vol. IX., p. 326). (Surveyed.)

- 1b. Inscriptions:—(1) In the temple of Muktesvara is a very short but important inscription, dated Śaka 821, Siddhārthi; (2) an old Kānarese inscription of king Vikramāditya Tribhuvanaśmalla (A.D. 1076-1127); (3) in the same temple a stone slab with three inscriptions dated Śaka 1181, 1143 and 1184; (4) in the temple of Išvara on the bank of the Tungbhadra an inscription of the great chieftain Vikramāditya of the lineage of Chandragupta, dated Śaka 1113, at the time of a solar eclipse at the new moon of Mārgaśīrṣa; (5) a slab also bearing three Yādava inscriptions dated Śaka 1185, 1186 and 1184; (6) one dated Śaka 1180 (at the back of No. 12); (7) another, Śaka 1213; (8) behind the image of Virabhadra in the temple of Gopadevamuni, Śaka 1184.

11. Heggeri, 4 miles south-west from Hallur, which is 23 miles south from Rānebennūr.

5. Waraha, 2 miles W.N.W. of Nidanegal, and 7 miles west from Māsūr, has a temple of Kāleśvara.

Inscriptions:—(1) A vfragal of the temple of Kāleśvara, Śaka 1210; (2) a māstika in the land belonging to Mallārappa Desāi, Śaka 1368.

6. Chhaparadahalli, 2 miles south-west of Rattihalli; has a temple of Hanumān, said to be very old.

There is an inscription slab outside the village to the north.

7. Kanavīsīdhageri, or Pura, (?) $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Rattihalli; temple of Kanavi Sīd-dheśvara.

Inscriptions:—(1) On one of a row of stones on the south of the temple of Siddhappa, Śaka 1030; (2) in the temple of Siddhappa, Śaka 1074; (3) on a pillar in the temple of Siddhappa, Śaka 1191; (4) on a pillar in the temple of Siddhappa, Śaka 1187.

8. Rattihalli, 10 miles S.S.E. from Kōd on the Choardi River (lat. $14^{\circ} 25' N.$, long. $75^{\circ} 30' E.$). Temple of Kodambeśvara in the Jākhanāchārya style, built about 700 years ago. It is built of sculptured slabs, and has three domes supported by 36 pillars; also a temple of Virabhadra. (Surveyed)

Inscriptions:—(1) In the temple of Kodambeśvara, on the right of the god, Śaka 1096; (2) in the same temple, on the left of the god, Śaka 1160; (3) in the same temple, on a pillar in the mādhyaṅga, Śaka 1160; (4) in the same temple, on another pillar, Śaka 1220; (5) on the right hand as you enter the gate of the fort, Śaka 1469; (6) another on the right hand as you enter the gate of the fort, Śaka 1479; (7) on the left hand as you enter the village gateway, Śaka 1472.

9. Hīre-Kerur, 7 miles S.S.W. of Kōd (lat. $11^{\circ} 28' N.$, long. $71^{\circ} 27' E.$), has a large tank ascribed to Janamejaya (whom the return places in the 10th century A.D.). An inscribed slab near the temple of Viṣhāparihareśvara is said to give some account of its construction. There is a copper-plate with one Chandi-Sivahasapi. The temples of Viṣhāparihareśvara (who is reputed to cure snake-bites), of Varāhakāleśvara, and of Durgā are returned as of no antiquarian note.

1b. Inscriptions:—(1) In the burial ground, Śaka 984; (2) at the temple of Totada Virabhadra, Śaka 987; (3) at the same temple, Śaka 1021; (4) in front of the door of the same temple, Śaka 1094; (5) standing near the eastern wall of the same temple, Rudhiredgari; (6) standing to the west of the Gaja-Lakshmi stone on the north of the garden-land of Kālapa-Sānhoga on the bank of the tank, Śaka 1031 or 1053; (7) on a stone to the east of a Gaja-Lakshmi stone on the bank of the tank, Śaka 1018; (8) on a stone to the south of the said Gaja-Lakshmi stone, Śaka 1025; (9) on a stone lying on the bank of the tank, Śaka 1023; (10) near the house of Angdi-Ninganna on the east of the mosque near the village gate, Śaka 1065; (11) on a stone in the burning ground near the tank near the house of Sarayadava in the street, Śaka 997 to 1015.

Ib In front of the temple are 11 stones, one of which bears an inscription dated Śāla 1304 It is a viragal

III 23 Hirehalli 4 miles north west of Muttur and 5 miles south west of Hāgiacelli,— Old temple and an inscription slab

III 24 Kaginehli, 13 miles NNW from Kol and 11 miles north east from Tihvalli (lat 14° 41' N, long 75° 25' E) In the same enclosure are two very plain stone temples dedicated to Adikeśava and Lakshmi Narasimha The former measures 66 feet long by 23 wide with 12 columns in the outer open mandapa That of Narasimha has a wooden pillared front mandapa The temples are said to have been built by two persons named Kondapa and Venkapa Kanakdās, the Kanarese poet is said to have brought the image of Adikeśava from the village of Bad near Bankapur He was a devotee who obtained the village of Basanahop and much land in adjoining villages as an mām from the Vijayanagar kings The priests are both Lingayats and Brahmins and have an allowance of Rs 194 for the celebration of the car festival In the court is a shrine of Bhairāṅgiri Svami into which are built four finely carved old pillars other fragments lie about with excellent carving on them There is a slab at the temple of Kalahasteeswari carved with figures of Śiva and Parvati and small ones of Ganapati and Kārtikasvami in entire relief in the same temple the pillars are carved with figures and festoons, the outer wall of the manḍapa is of mud and small stones the sikhara however is old

I b. Inscriptions:—(1) On the east of the temple of Kalahastēśvarā on the north of the village, sunk in the earth, 6' 10" above ground by 3' 9", Śaka 1042; (2) a viragal at the same temple, Śaka 1204; (3) on the dhvajastambha at the same place; (4) one nearly quite covered, in front of the same; (5) on the north side of the temple of Virabhadra at the same place are three stones sunk deep in the earth; (6) about twenty yards south-east from Someśvara's temple, one over 6' high by 3' 2" broad, in good preservation except where the villagers have been sharpening their knives, &c., on the edge of it; (7) between this and the temple is another entirely sunk in the earth; it should be removed and preserved; (8) west from the same a viragal, 2' 1" broad, an inscription deeply sunk in the earth; (9) at Sangameśvara's shrine is an inscription sunk in a mud platform—not very legible; (10) on three finely carved old pillars in the shrine of Bhandārigiri Svāmi at Lakshmi Nārāyaṇa's temple are five short inscriptions.

I b. 25. Ingalgondi, 8 miles south from Koḍ (?). Inscription at the temple of Kalleśvara on the bank of the tank, dated Śaka 971; and a maṣṭikā on the edge of a small tank in the temple, Bahudhānya.

I b. 26. Nagawand, 9 miles south by east from Raṭṭihalli; inscription on the bank of the tank, Śaka 1042.

II b. 27. Hallar on the Tungabhadra, 10 miles south-east of Raṭṭihalli (lat. 14° 21' N., long. 75° 41' E.), has a temple and an inscription.

III. 28. Bhairavanpad. This village was the northern limit of Hailā, formerly called Sindhunagara, the capital of the Sindhu Ballāla dynasty, whose lutadevala is said to have been Bhairava. The great temple was ruined by Tipu Sultan; and the present one built by the Svāmi of Kudalgi, to whom the village was granted by Hanmant Ganda, Paligar of Havanur.

Hallur, Harihar, Hampi and Sri Śāla are considered holy places, and the scenery on the Tungabhadra at them is said to be fine.

To the west of the village is an inscription of the Sindhu Ballāla kings.

III. 29. Kukigeri or Kirgeri, 9 miles east of Raṭṭihalli;—temple of Hauumān built by one Konappa Suukad, a Collector of Customs, who grew rich, about 300 years ago. The roof is supported by 16 pillars.

III. 30. Sa'tenhalli, 10 miles W.N.W. of Koḍ and 8 miles south east from Tijivalli (lat. 14° 35' N., long. 75° 23' E.). Temple of Rāmalinga.

I b. Inscriptions:—(1) On the south of the temple of Rāmalinga, Śaka 1036; (2) on one of a row of stones on the south of the temple of Rāmalinga, Śaka 1125; (3) a viragal at the temple of Rāmalinga, Śaka 1125; (4) in front of the temple Kallappa on the bank of the Chikkonati tank, half a mile from the village, Śaka 1064; (5) near the temple of Hari-Hara, Śaka 1125; (6) a viragal in a row of stones outside the village, Śaka 1125; (7) in the temple of Nārāyaṇa, Śaka 1162; (8) standing against the wall on the east of the temple of Hanumanta, Śaka 1502.

III. 31. Kachvi, 5 miles south by east from Tijivalli.

I b. Inscriptions—(1) A viragal in front of the temple of Rāmeśvara, Śaka 1176;

III. (2) on the south front of the temple of Ganappa, Śaka 1673.

32 Yammiganur, 7 miles south from Pilihalli

- 16 Inscriptions —(1) At the temple of Parameśvara, Saka 1070, (2) a sthalagal lying on the left of the temple of Parameśvara outside the village, Saka 1095, (3) a sthalagal at the temple of Basavanna outside the village, Saka 1098

III 33 Kadur, 3 miles east of Ratthalli —temple and inscription

III 34 Madak, 12 miles south from Kod (lat $14^{\circ} 22' N$, long $75^{\circ} 29' E$) on the borders of Maisur, has a large artificial tank, of which the following account was supplied by Lieutenant Colonel Playfair, R E —

"The so called Madak Tank is a legacy to us from the ancient rulers of that part of the country. It was probably a work of the Anagundi kings, who appear to have been great tank builders, at any rate they have the credit of most of the fine tanks with which the southern part of the Dharwar Collectorate is dotted. In this particular case they failed from errors of construction. The site selected was, apparently, a very favourable one: a considerable river, after passing through an extensive plain, entered a gorge in the hills of no great breadth, which it was comparatively easy to close. This they did, and on a magnificent scale, by an earthen dam, about 800 feet thick at the base and 100 feet in height. The hills in the neighbourhood still present clear traces of the vast excavations for material, and of the roads by which it was brought to the site. While a fort of considerable protension on a hill commanding the tank is stated by tradition to have been erected for the protection of the work-people. Not content with the mass of earth thrown up, as an additional precaution they faced it, particularly at the point where it crossed the river, with enormous blocks of stone. The sluices were conceived on a similar magnificent scale. The same principle was adopted as is general throughout the Collectorate viz, a rectangular masonry channel through the dam, closed with a perforated stone fitted with a wooden stopper, but the tank being large these sluices were in proportion, and where in ordinary practice small stone pillars would carry the platform over the stopper here the supports formed of a single stone weighed about 20 tons each. To the upper sluice a tradition of human sacrifice is attached. It runs as follows. Being the crowning point or finishing touch to this great work, the king and all his courtiers had assembled to witness the erection of the first of the above mentioned monolith pillars but all the efforts of the workmen were in vain. Day after day passed still the pillar was obdurate. A rumour became current that the goddess was angry and that nothing save a human sacrifice would appease her. The beautiful Lakshmi the virgin daughter of the chief Vaddar (or tank digger) then stepped forward and offered herself which the brutes accepted and she was buried alive below the site of the stone, which was then erected without further trouble. I mention this anecdote as curious and because I believe it founded on fact. The sluice is now a temple and I have been informed that it became so in consequence of this sacrifice.

'The tank was finished and gradually filled, when to the utter discomfiture of its constructors it burst not through the valley they had so carefully closed but through the hill side itself. It is difficult now to ascertain the exact cause. Tradition says that there was a third sluice on the hill where the breach now is. If so it must have been the waste weir, and utterly insufficient for its purpose as the native weirs co, and in the absence of any miners or men at all skilled in tunnelling, the only plan appeared to be to gently dig over the broken stones and trust to find sounder ones beyond, and thus again get a roof over our heads. This turned out to be the case. Only a few of the covering stones had fallen in, and the earth above them was sufficiently consolidated by time to allow of a passage being dug over. In this way the two parties at length joined, and the old subterranean gallery was opened from end to end (800 feet in all), and the draught through them made the air pleasant enough.

"The culvert below the floor of the old work was then proceeded with, the latter acting as a ventilator as well as roof till the new tunnel was arched in. All went on well enough till towards the centre, where rock of the very hardest nature was met with which could, as it were, be only scribbled away by our tools. Blasting was out of the question with such a rickety mass of old masonry above, and the remaining work was literally taken out in powder.

"The rayats, who had watched our efforts with interest not unmixed with grave doubts as to the water goddess who had frustrated the original builder, over allowing any one else to succeed, are now contentedly irrigating their lands with the plentiful stream issuing from the new culvert. A considerable length of canal has been made and more is making, and a very fine expanse of garden land is in course of creation. The sketches annexed (Plates I and II) sufficiently illustrate the work without requiring further description. The key to the whole was the tapping the long imprisoned water by the low level tunnel, which, though an insignificant work in England, was not so in that far off corner of the Bombay Presidency, with no mines or appliances but the unskilled cooly with his patrah."

About four hundred years ago the Putal of Masur, whose family lived at Pura Tarkeri in the Simoga taluk, had a beautiful daughter called Kenchava, whom the king of Aargundi wished to marry, but she objected to him as a Kshatriya, and fled. The Tungabhadra River made way for her. Her parents wished to marry her to the Putal of Isur, Sikkharpur taluk, and set out to celebrate the marriage, but passing a temple which stood where now the Madak tank is, she entered it and devoted herself to the god. Her sister was married to the Isur Putal and the Aargundi king made the tank, when the temple was submerged. The rain fall was so abundant the year that the tank was built, that it was watched lest it should burst. The talavar, the guard became possessed of Kenchava, who told him to inform Mallanguda of Masur that she would not remain any longer where she was, unless a woman in the ninth month of pregnancy were sacrificed to her. The talavar said he was afraid to leave the tank, for if it burst while he was away the Putal would punish him. Kenchava, however, promised that the embankment should not break, but if he were long in returning, the water would burst through the hills but not through the bed. The Putal, annoyed at the man leaving his post, had him tied up and punished, and did not offer the sacrifice. Kenchava consequently broke through the hill and the embankment as well.

Legend further says that poor people used to go to the tank and beg for a loan of nose and ear rings to use at marriage ceremonies and found them on the bank. Once, a man without returning the ornaments went and called Kenchava by name, to which she answered. He exclaimed, 'Why, then say you are dead, and yet here you answer me.' Since then she has been mute.

Twelve years ago a fisherman's tackle got entangled in the roof of the submerged temple. Diving down to disentangle it, he entered the temple and saw a golden image of Konehavā. She warned him that if he revealed to any one that she was alive, he would burst a blood-vessel and die. He asked her how he would get away, whereon she pushed him up to the surface. Two years after he went to Harihar and divulged the secret, but died from the bursting of a blood-vessel.

In times of drought the heads of the temples in Śikharpur taluka, Maisūr, come to this tank with a talt or round piece of gold and a nose-ring, which they obtain from the Pāṭil of Māsūr. They place food on a small raft, and pushing it off into the tank pray to Konehavā for rain.

XII.—JACHIRS OF SIRDATTI, LAKSHMESVAR, SATANUR AND JANKHANDI.

1. Lakshmesvar, 21 miles north-east of Shiggāon and 20 miles north of Karajgi (lat. $15^{\circ} 7'$, long. $75^{\circ} 21'$), the ancient Pulikeri, contains a group of extremely interesting temples but "so completely ruined that it is almost impossible to make out their history with anything like certainty." One of them "is of great age, contemporary with the temples of Harnhalli and Kiruwaṭṭi (Korvatti) and belonging, therefore, most probably, to the thirteenth century."—Fergusson, Arch., Dharwar and Mysore, Ph., 48, 49. The principal temples are—(1) that of Someśvaradeva in the south of the town, built of black granite and white stone, and is of very considerable size. Instead of the invariable linga it contains an image of Śiva riding on Nandi, with Pārvaṭi behind him. The walls inside and out are decorated with numerous figures,—much of the carving is regarded as illustrative of the Mahābhārata. In the mandapa are four lines of columns supporting the roof, the central compartment of which is beautifully carved. It measures about 80' by 42'. To the west of the temple is a beautiful steeple well with an inscription in a small room belonging to it. (2) The temple of Śrī Lakshmiṅga in the west of the town is also a large one, and the walls are sculptured with mythological figures; near it is a tank. (3) Saṅkhabastī, an old Joiaa temple in the middle of the town, recently repaired with brick. The roof is supported by 36 pillars. (4) Hala-bastī, a smaller Joiaa temple. (5) The temple of Kōḍiyelamā, Beautifully carved stones abound in walls, drains, &c. The Māmlatdār has saved such as attracted his attention, and built them up in the court of the kacheri. (Surveyed.)

- I b. The Kālī Masjid 65' by 35' is noted for its chains cut out of stone and beautiful traceries, which are copied as excellent patterns by silversmiths, &c. It is one of the prettiest mosques in the Presidency. It was built in 1617 A.D.

Inscriptions.—These are numerous. Twenty-nine have been collected by the Māmlatdār in front of the kacheri. Two are at the temple of Lakshmiṅga; three in that of Someśvara; one near the Dosā's well; six at the Saṅkhabastī; two near the Agarkatti Agastī have been removed to the kacheri; one near the Sankhatṭriṭha; one near the Sahasraliṅga temple; and three Persian and Arabic ones are in the mosques. The dates read on some of them are Śaka 1354, "Chālnīya Vikrama Samvatsara Sarvajita," Śaka 1168 (a Yādava inscription); the tenth year of Jagadekamalla, Prabbara Samvatsara

Thursday, 12th Āshādha Śuddha (P. S. and O. C. Ins. No. 97); two in Śāla 890 Vibhaya Samvatsara; two of Sadāsivārāya of Vijayanagar (A.D. 1542-1561); one dated Śāla 1469, Plavaṅga Samvatsara; a stragal of Śāla 1000, Kaliyukta Samvatsara Sobhakritu Samvatsara, Śāla 49; in the reign of Tribhuvanamalla, Bhānu Samvatsara, Śāla 27; in the reign of the Yādava king of Suahāga (A.D. 1132-1169); Vilambi Samvatsara, 1460; and one contains the Chālukya genealogy to Jagadekamalla, "the elder brother (?) of Bijala." (Ind. Ant., VII. 101, 111; XI. 156. J. B. B. R. A. S., Vol. IX. p. 329.)

II b.

2. Sirhatti, 10 miles north-east of Lakshmesvar (lat. $15^{\circ} 14'$, long. $75^{\circ} 39'$). "The palace at Sirhatti is, though less magnificent (than that at Vijayanagar), a much more favourable specimen of the style. It is built in stone, and both artistically and constructively is well proportioned and elegant. Though the windows are pointed there are probably no real arches in the building; and the sculptures, though sufficient to authenticate its Hindu origin, are kept so subdued as not to interfere with its Muhammadan outline. It is easy to see that the building is a direct copy of one of the palaces of Bijāpūr, most probably the Asbar Mubārak, of which it is, in fact, little more than a reduced repetition; but it is copied with a degree of taste seldom found in such examples, and therefore more than usually pleasing."—Fergusson, Arch., Dhar. and Mys., Ph. 87, p. 72.

II b.

3. Kundgol, Jamkhandi, 20 miles south-east from Dhārwar (lat. $15^{\circ} 15'$, long. $75^{\circ} 19'$). There is a fine old temple, more within the limits of the village of Par than Kundgol; it is built without lime, of highly polished stones, which are dovetailed into one another. The carvings and images on the pillars and roof are well cut, but have been injured by Muhammadans. It was repaired by a former chief in 1808-9, and dedicated to Śiva and Pārvatī. (Surveyed)

III—BIJÁPUR ZILLA

I—BIJÁPUR TĀLŪKĀ

Bijapur, at one time the capital of the Dakhan, is situated about two hundred and forty miles, as the crow flies, to the south east of Bombay. It is now reached by the Southern Marathi Railway from its junction with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway at Hotgi, and is fifty-eight and a half miles south of this junction.

Bijapur suddenly sprung into existence as an important factor in the affairs of the Dakhan, rapidly attained the highest rank among its states, and just as suddenly collapsed. It enjoyed the dignity of a capital, the seat of the 'Adil Shahs, for two hundred years, and then surrendered its liberty to the overwhelming power of Delhi, and was thenceforth compelled to take the secondary rank of one of its numerous dependencies.

Yūsuf, son of Amurath II, of Antolia, Sultan of Turkey, would have shared the fate his brothers met with on the death of his father had he not been secretly sent away to Persia by his mother. Here he grew up, but, becoming known, was obliged to fly the country. He eventually reached India and found his way to Bidar, where he took service under the minister Mahmud Gawan, who appointed him to the body guard of the king, Muhammad Shāh. He soon rose in the service and estimation of the latter and was eventually given the command of the guard, afterwards being created Master of the Horse with the title of 'Adil Khan. When the Bidar kingdom became too unwieldy to be governed direct from the capital it was divided into districts with local governors in charge. Yūsuf was so placed in charge of Bijapur. The power thus put into the hands of these governors soon turned their heads from loyalty to their sovereign to thoughts of self-aggrandisement and, collecting round them troops and followers who were promised rewards and distinction in the new régime, they soon threw over their allegiance to Bidar and started petty kingships on their own account. Yūsuf was not long in following suit and established himself King of Bijapur under the title of Yūsuf 'Adil Shāh in A.D. 1489. He and his descendants continued to hold their own, until, in the reign of Sikandar, Bijapur was attacked by the Mughal army under Aurangzib, captured, and attached as a new district under the all absorbing power of Delhi. During this period many stirring and romantic scenes occurred both within and without its walls and in the battlefield. In the city so many hostile elements were thrown together, Shahs and Sultans, Hindus, Abyssinians, Dakhanis, Turks, Persians, Arabs and other mercenaries, troublesome and restless spirits, ever upon the alert for adventures by which to gain their own respective ends, that it is not surprising that the very streets were often the scenes of bloody conflicts, that the palaces harboured conspirators and assassins, and that at critical times these internal dissensions left them open to the mercy of their enemies, who, like vultures around them, ever sat watching their opportunity of swooping down upon the unfortunate city.

The real building period of Bijapur did not commence until 'Alī (I) 'Adil Shāh ascended the maṇad. He was a great patron of the arts and welcomed artists and learned men to his capital. One of the first buildings undertaken was the Jumā Masjid which, for simplicity of design, unpretentious grandeur, and the solemn stillness of its corridor, stands

- IIa (19) Ikhlas Khân's Mosque, 253 (Cir. 1560) — This mosque is situated about three hundred yards west of the Fath Gate. It is now very much dilapidated, but what is left shows us at a glance that, though small, it was originally a very ornate building. It is constructed upon the old lines before Ibrâhîm II inaugurated the more elaborate style of well dressed and decorated cut stone building.
- IIa (20) The Chhotâ 'Asâr Mosque, 14. — This is a small mosque about two hundred and fifty yards to the east of the Dakhani Idgah, remarkable for the abundance of rich ornament in stucco which covers the walls, ceiling, and part of the façade, otherwise there is little worth note about the mosque. It has a very flat wagon-vaulted ceiling, a kind often met with in Bijapur, but nothing like that in 'Alî Shâhid Pîr's mosque.
- III (21) The Dakhani Idgâh, 12 (1538) — This building being, as all idgâhs are, practically a short length of walling flanked by minârs or bastions, is one of the ugliest buildings in the city. It is placed upon high ground in the west of the city not far from the last mosque.
- IIa. (22) The Rangî Masjid, 216 — About three hundred yards east of the hamlet of Shahapet, amongst ruined buildings, thickly overgrown with prickly pear and the wild custard apple, is a small mosque known as the 'Rangî Masjid,' and so called on account of the traces of some painted decoration which embellished its walls and ceiling.
- III (23) Mosque, 2 — This is a small, rough, and coarsely built mosque behind (north of) the 'Alî (II) Rauza, and of no consequence. It has a wagon-vaulted roof. Before it was a tomb (?), but this has been broken down of late, and the stones removed by the owner of the field in which it is.
- III (24) Mosque, 3 — A small mosque about eighteen feet square, with a one-arched front, standing a little way to the north-west of the last. It has two minârs, is very plain, but fairly perfect and out in front of it stands, on a high basement, a cut-stone tomb which has been split in two by a nim tree that has grown through it.
- III. (25) Mosque, 4 — This mosque is not now of very much account, though what remains of its plaster decoration both inside and out shows that it was a very neatly finished building. It is now in a very dirty state, having been used for living in, and for this object rubble partition walls have been built up within. It is not far from the last two buildings, being about a hundred yards north-west of the 'Alî (II) Rauza.
- III. (26) Mosque, 7 — This small mosque, in the northern part of the new bazar, has been converted into a Hindu temple in which is placed the linga and Nandi with a snake stone. Round the whole has been built an enclosing wall. This building is of no account.
- III. (27) Mosque, 11 — This is a small strongly built mosque close under the west side of the Hadar bastion or Uparî (or Uphî) Bury. It is in fair preservation but of little architectural merit. It is now used by a family who have taken up their quarters in one corner of it.
- (28) Mosque, 13 — A small substantially built mosque in good condition situated in a hollow, a little way to the south of the Dakhani Idgah. Its parapet and cornice have been damaged only the brackets of the latter remaining. Of no particular interest.

- III. (29) Mosque, 15.—A small mosque, fairly well built, but of no merit, about one hundred and fifty yards east of the Chhotā 'Asār. The design of the bracketing under the cornice is slightly different from the usual patterns.
- III. (30) Mosque, 17.—A small mosque near the tomb of Sikandar 'Adil Shāh with its north-east corner broken down. Of no account.
- III. (31) Mosque, 18.—A small stone mosque of no particular merit with six brick and plaster minārs. It is known as the Fath Masjid.
- III. (32) Mosque, 19.—Known as the Ghās Mundi Masjid, and an insignificant little place.
- II b. (33) Mosque, 21.—A small mosque at the back of the Chānd Bāori and so called the Chānd Bāori ki Masjid. It has two large corner minārs and six smaller ones. The building is in good repair, is a fair specimen of its class, and should be cared for.
- III. (34) Mosque, 54.—A small mosque of little account. There is an inscription in plaster over the mehrab and there are some good plaster discs on the front of the mosque, and on the face of the minār buttresses.
- III. (35) Mosque, 60.—A small mosque of no account: now used as a stable.
- III. (36) Mosque, 62.—A small mosque with one minār, of no merit, used as a stable.
- III. (37) Mosque, 66.—A small mosque of no consequence.
- III. (38) Mosque, 68.—A very small mosque of no account.
- III. (39) Mosque, 70.—Another very small mosque of little interest, with four minārs standing.
- III. (40) Mosque, 73.—A small white-washed masjid having a complete cornice, with geometric patterns carved in low relief on the under sides of the cornice slabs, but much obscured by frequent application of white-wash. Nothing of particular interest about the mosque.
- III. (41) Mosque, 74.—A small plain mosque of little account occupied by some Mubammadns as a dwelling. In the mehrab is an inscription, the upper part of which tells us the mosque was built by Malik Šandal.
- III. (42) Mosque, 84.—A small partly damaged stone mosque of no account.
- III. (43) Mosque, 85.—A small mosque converted into a police chauki.
- III. (44) Mosque, 88.—A small masjid with one broad low arch in front: of no account.
- II (45) Mosque, 90.—A small plain mosque with short brick minārs: of no interest.
- III (46) Mosque, 95.—Ruins of a small insignificant mosque.
- III (47) Mosque, 96.—A small mosque of no account; used to store grass in.
- III. (48) Mosque, 97.—A small mosque of no consequence, and used like the last to

- III (49) Mosque, 99 —A small mosque of not much account and greatly damaged. It has a three-arched façade, and most of the plaster with which it was coated, both inside and out, has fallen away.
- III. (50) Mosque, 101 —This is a small clean-looking plastered mosque with one large arch in the façade. It has brick and plaster minārs and languras.
- III. (51) Mosque, 102 —A small mosque of no account.
- III (52) Mosque, 103 —A small mosque with four small blackstone tombs of females in front of it. The building is of no interest.
- III (53) Mosque, 107 —Of no importance.
- III (54) Mosque, 109 —An ordinary mosque with a three-arched façade, plastered within, and with little ornament. It has a deep cornice but much damaged, and a row of plastered languras along the roof line.
- III (55) Mosque, 111.—A small damaged mosque of no account.
- III (56) Mosque, 112 —A small masjid of little account called Shah Shahid ki Masjid.
- III (57) Mosque, 113 —This mosque is situated in the corner between the roads leading to the Jamī Masjid and 'Asr Mahāl from the citadel gate. It is not of very much account, but from its position might be cleaned out and kept so. The vaulting of the roof is peculiar and looks antiquated, and is carried out in the same style as that of the tomb of 'Alī I in the south west corner of the city. The minārs are short hall-topped pillars rising but little above the roof.
- III. (58) Mosque, 117 —This mosque, which was originally a fairly well finished building, stands close behind the Miltari Mahāl mosque with so little space between the two that it is very evident it was built before the latter, as it would never, otherwise, have been built so close up behind another mosque. The masonry, which has been plastered, is not nearly so good as that of the Miltari Mahāl buildings adjacent to it.
- III (59) Mosque, 119 —This is called Nazir Husain Sahib ki Masjid. It is a small mosque with two short round chimney-like minārs of brick and plaster work connected by a row of languras. One large single arch spans the front, over which projects a deep but much damaged cornice. The only ornament is a little plaster decoration around the little niches inside the mehrab.
- III (60) Mosque, 112 —A small mosque of no account.
- III (61) Mosque, 126 —A small mosque very like No. 113 and vaulted in the same manner. The cornice is very plain and shallow and hardly dips at all. The central ceiling is worked in plaster into radiating spiral ribs. The mehrab appears to have had painted letters upon the front of it.
- III (62) Mosque, 129 —A small mosque of little interest, with a much broken cornice, and plastered within and without.

- III. (63) Mosque, 130.—A small mosque behind 'Ali Shāhid Pir's mosque and, like it, wagon-vaulted, but it is very much smaller and more roughly built; in fact it looks like an experimental structure where the peculiar vaulting introduced into 'Ali Shāhid Pir's mosque was first tried. It is of no account.
- III. (64) Mosque, 131.—Hamza Husaini ki Masjid. This is a very plain-looking building with its central arch similar in outline to those of Yūsuf's old Jami Masjid, and on the roof, straight above its apex, and breaking the continuity of the languras, is a small chhattri with a dome similar to those of the corner ones above Yūsuf's old Jami Masjid.
- III. (65) Mosque, 132.—Called Shāhzādi Sāheb ki Masjid. This is a small stone building with two plain little thin octagonal minārs, surmounted with ball tops, above the forward corners of the roof, and smaller ones over the two back corners. The façade arches, which have a distinct turn-up at the crowns after the ogee type, have some very good plaster-work round their crowns. The interior of the mosque is vaulted like No. 113 and the tomb of 'Ali I. The arch springings and those of the mehrab arch are on the same level.
- III. (66) Out in front of this mosque are the ruins of a mahāl, and before this again is a laid-out garden and graveyard, in the centre of which is a high square masonry platform. Upon this an octagonal pavilion was to have been raised over three graves, but only the beginning of the basement and piers was accomplished.
- III. (67) Mosque, 135.—An old rubble built mosque of not much account. The arches are of the very straight-lined style used in Yūsuf's old Jami Masjid and in mosque 131.
- III. (68) Mosque, 144.—A small mosque of no account.
- III. (69) Mosque, 153.—Munshi Āmin Sāheb ki Masjid, of no particular interest.
- III. (70) Mosque, 154.—Nāgar Bāori Wāli ki Masjid. This is a well built mosque of cut-stone, with the courses of the masonry, as a rule, level and regular. The minārs have octagonal shafts; the cornice slabs have been removed but the brackets, which are fine heavy substantial ones, remain. Along under the cornice, between each pair of brackets, is a shallow niche or panel holding a coarser and chainer. There are two end arches to the building, one each in the south and north end walls; the interior is vaulted like the tomb of 'Ali I. Close beside it is the Nāgar Bāori which is used to irrigate the surrounding gardens.
- III. (71) Mosque, 155.—A badly built mosque, in ruins. In front of it, on the east, is a partly built twelve-sided tomb, the piers being carried up as far as the springing line of the arches. Within this are two ruined graves.
- III. (72) Mosque, 161.—The Kali Masjid is a well built plain mosque standing on the north side of the main road running past the Jami Masjid and not far from the latter. There is nothing of interest about the mosque itself, but in a room attached to it is kept a panjā called "Husain Alam" which is set up at the Muharram. It is said to be of old workmanship; it certainly is a splendid piece of perforated metal-work, the perforations leaving an interlaced Persian inscription. It is said to be made of an alloy composed of five metals with gold and silver among them.

- III (73) Mosque, 162 — Small ruined mosque of no account
- III (74) Mosque, 165 — An old mosque converted into a dwelling
- III (75) Mosque, 166 — Ibrahim Bndd. Masjid A small whitewashed insignificant mosque
- III (76) Mosque, 169 — A very small mosque of no account
- III (77) Mosque, 175 — Called the Gatch Mahal Masjid This is a plain substantially built mosque in very fair condition The minars and languras are very plain, a neat string course, carrying a row of little hills or drops, runs round the sides and back
- III (78) Pär Khan's Masjid, 181 — A neat little mosque with two slender minars and a good but damaged cornice Of the three arches of the façade the central one is cusped and between the brackets under the cornice, as in Mahil a Jahān's mosque, are niches with the center and chain A gateway with two minars, facing the road and at right angles to the mosque, likens the buildings in arrangement to the Miltari Mahal and Bātula Khan's mosque and the corbelling of the roof inside this gateway is on the same principle as in the former The mosque is said to have been built by Pär Khān, a Pathān
- III (79) Dhāi Wādī Masjid, 182 — This mosque is situated between Pär Khān's mosque and the Allāhpur Gate Its minarets, only one of which now rises above the roof, are of a different style to any others in the city Their plan is what might be called an octofoil, that is it is bounded by eight convex curves, so that in elevation the minaret has something the appearance of a clustered column with narrow horizontal fillets binding it at intervals The pendentives inside are rather well designed and those in the central bay are prettily ornamented On the façade are some good plaster medallions containing interwoven Persian or Arabic letters and other ornament decorates the crevices of the arches The cornice is in fair preservation but the slabs are damaged
- III (80) Mosque, 187 — Small mosque whose façade is spanned by a single arch, but of no account
- III (81) Mosque, 199 — A small mosque of no account
- III (82) Mosque, 203 — This is an ordinary looking mosque built on a high plinth ending out before the Adālat Mahal or Collector's residence Instead of the regular it had little ornamental finials above the corners of the roof, some of the back alone remaining The building appears to be of very late workmanship
- II (83) Mosque, 206 — A small mosque partly ruined beside the first milestone on the new road but of no interest
- III (84) Mosque, 207 — This small mosque was in its day, a very ornamental one, but it is now sadly dilapidated The façade languras, and minars, have been covered with delicate stucco ornament, the languras themselves, being of a more ornamental style than elsewhere There is not the usual sunk mihrāb, but two small niches, with gable

The façade now stands out alone from the rest of the building, the cross arches and vaulted roofing, which connected it with the main block, having fallen. This was probably due to the sinking of the back wall, and consequent canting over of the building when the façade arches refusing to yield, the two parted company, with the result that the intermediate ceiling and transverse arches fell. In the Sangat Mahal at Torweb, four miles west of Bijapur, we have a duplicate of this building though not quite so large, the roof of which is in great part remaining and here may be studied the manner in which the Gagan Mahal was roofed over. All the timber work, which must have been very valuable, was cleared away by the Maráthás, the beams and brackets being ruthlessly torn from the walls.

The main feature of this palace is its great central arch which has a span of 60 feet 9 inches. It was desirable, of course, to have a clear open front before the Darhár Hall, unobstructed by piers or masonry of any kind, so that the king and his nobles could have an uninterrupted view of the assemblage without, and also witness tournaments and duels that appear to have frequently taken place on the sward before the hall. To accomplish this the architect made his span equal to the length of the front of the hall but, unfortunately, the result is not pleasing. He seems to have forgotten the height of the building when he determined upon this great span, and the consequence is an unwieldy arch out of all good proportion, and much too low for its width. It should have been at least one-third, or better, half as high again in which case the narrow side arches would have been divided each into two arches, one over the other, the second starting from the first floor. Many a stirring scene took place here, and it was on the green sward before the palace that Colonel Meadows Taylor in his delightful story "A Noble Queen" makes the deadly encounter take place between the Abyssinian and the Dákhni. It was within this hall that the glory of the 'Adil Sháhís departed for ever, when Aurangzib, after his capture of the city, commanded its unfortunate king Sikandar the last of his line to appear before him in silver chains, while at the same time he received the submission of its nobles.

- 1a (115) The Sat Manzil, 278 (A.D. 1553)—The pile of apartments known as the Sat Manzil, or seven storeys, stands a little way to the south west of the Gagan Mahal, at the corner of a range of buildings enclosing a quadrangle, and called the Granary. At present it rises to a height of five storeys, 97 feet over all, but a narrow stair ascends from the fifth to a sixth which does not now exist. It is probable there was one still higher than this again, or perhaps a roof terrace, but it must have been very small for the different storeys diminish in area as they ascend. It is said to have been built by Ibrahim II in 1553 as a palace, but if it was even used as such it must have been far more extensive than it is now, for its accommodation is very restricted. It certainly extended a little way further on the south side and still farther along the walls on the north. One peculiar feature of this class of buildings is the number of water pipes and cisterns about them such as are found at Mubarak Khán's Mahal in the south east of the city and the water pavilions at Kumtgi. Here we have cisterns on the different floors and like those the walls were subsequently painted with figures and other ornament. Traces of two of the figures still remain on the north wall of the first floor, in which a lively imagination has detected the outlines of the portrait of Ramabha the favourite of Muhammad and the Sultan himself. The walls are said to have been beautifully gilded until the Rájá of Sítárá ordered the precious veneer to be scraped off thinking thereby to reap a veritable golden harvest, but, the Muhammadans resentfully remark that he got naught but dust for his pains. As with the Gagan Mahāl all the wood-work has been carried away. It is certainly by no means a handsome-looking building now, but there can be no doubt that the richly carved window-frames, brackets, screens, and weather boards, when they existed, added greatly to enhance its general effect.

Ia. Immediately in front of the Sāt Manzli, on the north, is a neat little structure, standing alone, the use of which is not very apparent. It was not unlikely a fountain or water pavilion standing in the middle of a reservoir, since filled up, and thus similar to those at Kumatgi and Mubārak Khān's Mahāl, but more ornate. Its finish and general workmanship are much like that of the little ruined pavilion in front of the 'Arash Mahāl. The Hindus have a belief among them that it is a ratha having its wheels buried in the ground below; but it is only a slight resemblance to such that has started this idea. There is a very similar edifice, though not quite so fine or so large, in the fields, a short distance to the north-east of Mustafā Khān's mosque.

III. (116) The 'Adālat Mahāl, 295.—The 'Adālat Mahāl or Hall of Justice is now the residence of the Collector. There is nothing about it worth notice. It has been extensively rebuilt and added to, so that little of the original walls of the old ruin can be distinguished from the new work. Beside it, serving now as out-houses, is what was once the Suraj Mahāl, and beneath these are extensive underground vaults.

III. (117) The 'Arash Mahāl, 272.—Like the last, this is also a converted building, and is now the Civil Surgeon's residence. It is on the east of the 'Adālat Mahāl. Standing out before it, on one of the bastions of the old citadel wall, are the remains of a small pavilion. This was originally a little garden house; or pleasure resort, and beneath it ran the moat which divided it from the plain without the walls.

III. (118) The Chini Mahāl, and Granary, 279.—The great quadrangle, together with the Chini Mahāl at its south end, of which the Sāt Manzli forms the north-west corner, has been known as the Granary, which is altogether a misnomer. The Chini Mahāl, called so from the amount of broken china found about there, was at one time a very fine building. It had a great lofty open verandah or hall in front between its two wings, and in this respect was somewhat similar to the Gagan Mahāl. Within is a splendid hall 128 feet long by 29 feet broad, rising to the roof of the building, and flanked with suites of rooms on different levels. Here again the staircases are built in the thickness of the back wall. It is difficult to say what the building was originally intended for, most probably a palace; but it has been turned to account of late years and is now the location of the public offices of the collectorate. All round the quadrangle was an arcade, which has also been converted, and is now used as record rooms, &c.

Ia. (119) The 'Asār Mahāl, 396 (Cir. 1616).—Upon the outer edge of the citadel moat, towards the east, and facing in that direction, is one of the ugliest buildings, yet the most sacred, in Byāpur, the 'Asār Mahāl, or Palace of the Relic. 1000 of the rooms within is supposed to have been enshrined a hair of the Prophet's beard.

III. Beside the 'Asār Mahāl, on the north, are the remains of a contiguous building called the Jahāz Mahāl, from, as some say, its fancied resemblance to a ship, but it certainly has

- IIa (139) 'Ali (II) Rauza 1 (1672)—The unfinished tomb of 'Ali (II) 'Adil Shah lies a short distance to the north of the citadel and the Gagan Mahal. The great high basement upon which the building stands is 215 feet square.

The most peculiar characteristic of the building is its arches: they are quite Gothic in outline, being struck from two centres with the curves carried up to the crown.

- Ia (140) Tombs of Khān Muhammad and 'Abdul Razaq Qadir, &c., 35 to 39—The tombs of Khān Muhammad (36) and 'Abdul Razaq Qadir (35), the domes of which are very conspicuous from afar, are known to European residents as the "Two Sisters," and to natives as the Jod Gumbaz or 'pair of domes,' on account of their close proximity and likeness, in size and shape, to one another. The octagonal building on the south is the resting-place of the traitor Khān Muhammad, or Khān Khānān as his sovereign called him, and of his son Khawās Khān, Vazir to Sikandar.

The larger square tomb (35), north of this, is that of 'Abdul Razaq Qadir, Khawās Khān's religious preceptor or domestic chaplain, and was, no doubt, built at the same time as the other.

- Ib (141) Tomb of Pir Shaikh Hamid Qadir, 45—This building, which stands close to the walls in the south-west corner of the city, nearly four hundred yards west of 'Ali (I) 'Adil Shah's tomb, covers the remains of the saints Shaikh Hamid Qadir and his brother Shaikh Latif Ulla Qadir, who lived in Bijapur during the reign of Ibrahim II.

- III (142) Tombs of Karīm Muhammad Qadir and Sayyid 'Abdul Rahman Qadir 156 and 158—These two tombs are situated near the south-east corner of the courtyard of the Jamī Masjid. They both have ceilings which are said to have been coated with a wash of pulverised mother of pearl, which gives them a silvery sheen. The tomb of Sayyid 'Abdul Rahman has also some very pretty raised stucco work in the ceiling.

- IIa (143) Malik Sandals Tomb 5—About one hundred and fifty yards to the north-west of the Post Office and Bukhari Masjid is a group of buildings known as Malik Sandal's tomb and mosque with its surrounding arcades and walls.

- Ia (144) The Kamrah Gumbaz, 9—The small canopy covering a tomb, and seen at a little distance to the north of the last, with a ribbed egg-shaped dome is called the Kamrah Gumbaz.

- III (145) Tombs 16—Two tombs, of no account.

- IIa (146) Sikandar Shah's Tomb, 18 (1689)—Not far from the south-east corner of the Chhoti Asar and three hundred and thirty yards due east of the Dā'han Idgāh is a small walled enclosure containing within it a plain white washed and chunamed grave, which is pointed out as that of Sikandar 'Adil Shah, the last king of Bijapur. There is however no inscription, or apparently any evidence, to support this tradition.

- III (147) Chand Baori ki Gumbaz 22—This is a small square building upon the west margin of the Chā and Baori close by the Shāhapur gate.

- Ib (148) Tomb 47—This is a small well built tomb, close beside that of Pir Shaikh Hamid Qadir already described, and having within it the grave of a man.

- Ib (149) Tomb, 18—Close beside the last is another plain well built tomb, with two graves (of males) within it. Up in the dome are two bands of writing in stucco
- III. (150) Tomb, 50—In the next field, to the north-east of the last, stands a solitary, small and damaged tomb with some curious pot and flower ornament in stucco under the dome.
- III (151) Jiffar Sakhīb ki Rauza, 51 (1647)—To the east of the last is a small masjid with a graveyard before it, in which are a number of graves in the open air, in some of which marble has been freely used. The principal grave is that of Jiffar Sakhīb, a saint, who is said to have come from Arabia to Bijapur, and to have died there in A D 1647
- III (152) Tomb, 52—This is a small unfinished tomb, of no particular account, which, with Nos 53, 57, 58 and 59, cluster around that of 'Alī (I) 'Adil Shāh.
- III. (153) Tomb, 53—This is another small unfinished tomb of no interest
- III. (154) Tombs, 57, 58 and 59.—Small open four-pierced canopies over tombs, but of no interest
- III (155) Tombs, 63 and 69—Small tombs of no account
- IIa. (156) Hishwar Khan's Tomb, 75—This tomb is situated close to the south-east corner of the Nau Bigh, and not far south-east of the "Two Sisters" It is unfinished, its brick dome not having been carried up beyond the ring of leaves around its oech.
- III (157) Tombs, 76, 77 and 78.—These buildings are close beside the last, and are of no particular interest
- III (158) Tomb, 79—This is situated in a large garden, or what was once a garden in the Nau Bigh. The garden is surrounded by a high wall. In the east side is the entrance gateway, in the north and south walls are small rooms, while in the west wall is a small masjid with a little room built on to either end of it. Around the four sides of the enclosure runs a broad raised path, and two other raised paths cross the whole area at right angles dividing the garden into four quarters. At the intersection of these, i.e. in the centre of the garden, is a raised square platform around which is a broad masonry channel for water. Upon this is an octagonal plinth, in the middle of which is a single grave, but both the grave and the platform have been rifled of their marble (?) casing, and it is not possible, from external evidence, to say now whether it be the grave of a man or a woman. It is, however, said to be the grave of the wife of Aurangzib, who died here of the plague soon after he took possession of the city. The ground within this enclosure is now all waste land
- III (159) Tombs, 87 and 89—No. 87 is a small building used as a dwelling but evidently built for a tomb. Number 89 is a small plain domed tomb in a hollow. Neither of any account
- III (160) Tomb, 89—A small domed canopy upon four piers, with a very good stone tomb within. The rest of the building is of no account
- III. (161) Ganja 'Alim Sahib ki Rauza, 106—This is situated on the road leading from the citadel to the 14th Gate, and not far from the former. It is known as Ganja 'Ilm Sahab ki Rauza. The walls within the tomb have been painted a dark red picked out with black and yellow lines around the arches, and around the octagonal string course above the arches is a painted inscription. The dome has been painted to represent black, white, and red clouds. The grave is a plain whitewashed one of stone. The walls that enclosed the small court, in which this tomb is, has bands of perforated plaster-work in plain patterns. At the south west corner is a small ruined mosque (107). Number 105 is a gateway. On the other side of the road, and belonging to this group, is a small mosque, of little account, called Ganja 'Ilm Sahab ki Masjid (104). It has four circular-shafted Hindu-looking pillars.

- III (162) Shaikh Mera Mutwalli ki Rauza, 121 —A small square ohunamed tomb, standing beside the Mihtar Mahal, of little account
- III (163) Hamza Husaini's Tomb 134 —A very plain little square domed building like No 106, and like it, too in having been painted within. The second grave is that of Hamza Husaini's son
- III (164) Tomb, 139 —A small domed building of no importance
- III (165) Tomb, 150 —Commencement of a small masonry tomb with some graves
- III (166) Manur Badi Sahab ki Gumbaz, 160 —A small plain domed building of no account
- III (167) Shamsa Zaba ki Gumbaz, 163 —A small domed tomb of no account
- III (168) Shah Qasim Qadir Tarfari ki Dargah, 168 —A fine black stone tomb under a small canopy, upon a large square platform. Upon the platform are a number of graves
- III (169) Tomb, 170 —This is a whitewashed stone tomb with four bands of inscription round it. The tomb was buried until recently when it was uncovered by persons who were building close by. The inscription contains the Bismillah formula, the profession of faith, and part of 256 ch II of the Quran
- III (170) Qasim Qadir's Tomb 176 —Within this courtyard are two tombs and a mosque. Qasim Qadir's tomb is a plain square whitewashed building surmounted by a dome, with little ball ornaments along the edge of the roof, four on a side.
- III (171) Shah Abu Tarab Qadir's Tomb, 177 —This tomb is close beside the last and is a small plain building. It has but four walls—a chaukandi—without roof, surrounding the grave
- III (172) Haji Hasan Sahab's Tomb 179 —This is a square tomb in the south of the road about midway between the Jami Masjid and the Alhijur Gate and near the junction of that road with the cross road leading to the Gol Gumbaz. Around the four sides are rows of little windows with wooden shutters, and the doorway is, as usual on the south.
- III (173) Tomb 180 —A small domed tomb of no account
- III (174) Tomb 181 —Small building in three bays domed above the central one in which are three graves. To the west of it is an ilth wall, and beyond this again is the platform of a building of no interest.

- III. (175) Tombs, 184 and 185.—Small tombs of no particular interest.
- III. (176) Tomb, 188.—Two well built but ruined platforms for tombs. Of no account.
- III. (177) Husain Pādshāh ki Gumbōz, 192.—Of no importance.
- III. (178) Tomb, 203.—Three bays of arcade with a high stilted dome over the centre. Very poorly built. Of no particular interest.
- III. (179) Tomb, 211.—This is a raised platform with ruined gravestones upon it. A high wall is built on the west margin of the platform, with a gateway through it and steps leading down from it.
- III. (180) Tomb, 214.—A small well built tomb in ruins.
- III. (181) Allāh Bābū's Tomb and Mosque, 223.—These buildings stand upon a very high base and are thus a very conspicuous and rather picturesque group. They are remarkable for their very high stilted domes which are mere ornamental adjuncts, since they are not the outer shells of domical ceilings. They are poorly built and are of no particular interest, save for the peculiarity just noted. Beneath the high platform on which these buildings stand are vaults for graves.
- III. (182) Tomb, 226.—A substantial-looking small-domed pavilion with the grave of a female within it. There are some pretty plaster medallions in the spandrels of the arch in the north face.
- III. (183) Tomb, 232.—A small ruined tomb of no account. It has a grave within covered with a white cloth.
- III. (184) Tomb, 233.—A small tomb with a pyramidal roof, and on that account said to be that of a Shiah or Rahzi. Of no interest.
- III. (185) Tomb, 239.—A walled enclosure, octagonal in plan, apparently intended to be a tomb. The walls are very thick. Of no account.
- III. (186) Tombs, 240.—A fallen tombstone with an inscription in two lines round the top giving a part of the thirteenth verse, Qurān chapter II. v. 256.
- III. (187) Sakia Bibi's Tomb, 249.—A small square-domed tomb. Near it, upon a platform in the open, is a dark green, well polished tombstone.
- III. (188) Shāh Alangi Majzub's Ranza, 251 (A.D. 1575).—Four wall enclosure a small square court in which there is a grave said to be that of Shāh Alangi Majzub.
- III. (189) Tomb, 255.—A small Shiah tomb of no interest.
- III. (190) Hashim Pir ki Gumbāz, 259.—Of no particular interest archaeologically, but of great sanctity in the eyes of Muhammadans as being the tomb of a celebrated saint.
- III. (191) Tomb, 261.—In the north-west quarter of the city, of no account.
- III. (192) Tomb, 269.—A small building of two bays, much ruined, with a man's grave in the north bay.

- III. (193) Sayyid Shāh Abn Tarab ki Chauhāndi, 294.—This is but the commencement of a building, being the four walls only. Good masonry.
- I a. (194) The Chānd Bāori, 92.—This tank, whose name is sometimes converted into Chandā Bāori, and which is next in importance to the Taj Bāori, is situated in the north-west corner of the town, not far from the Shāhāpur Gato. This was the model upon which the Taj Bāori was constructed, and in general arrangement it is like the latter, though not so grand.
- I a. (195) The Taj Bāori, 42.—This tank stands alone as the most important reservoir of the most ambitious design, in the city. It is nearly square in plan—223 feet each way—and is enclosed within high walls on the east, south, and west, and a range of apartments on the north. The entrance is through the middle of this last side by a broad flight of steps over which is thrown a lofty arch, 35 feet in span, flanked by octagonal towers. The apartments on the east and west of this entrance were intended for the temporary accommodation of travellers. Descending the broad flight of steps between the towers and passing under the great arch, we come upon a landing which juts out into the water of the tank, from which flights of steps on both sides lead down to the water's edge. Around the inner side of the high wall that encloses it, runs a narrow gallery or terrace with a low parapet wall on the inner side. This communicates with sets of rooms in the middle of each of the three sides which overlook the tank, those on the south side being appropriated and converted into a Hindu shrine dedicated to Bāladeva. Above the sides of the tank are arrangements for raising water, those on the south being still used to irrigate the gardens behind.
- III. (196) Bibi Būndi ki Bāori.—A tank close to the walls on the west of the Taj Bāori, now all filled in.
- II b. (197) The Gumat Bāori, 49 (A.D. 1562)—This is a small well close by the tomb of Pir Shaikh Hamid Qādir in the south-west corner of the city. Inscription.
- III. (198) Bāori, 94.—An old well behind the Chhotā Chini Mahāl, of no account.
- III. (199) Bāori, 136.—To the north of Mustafā Khān's palace is an old well, upon the south side of which is a stairway leading down to the water. This well appears to have supplied Mustafā Khān's reservoir and gardens with water, and several earthen pipes may be seen leading from it.
- III. (200) Bāori, 140.—This is an old underground well of very clear water on the premises of Khawās Khān's palace. It seems to extend some distance under ground, and the temperature below is deliciously cool.
- III. (201) Pādshāh ki Bāori, 157.—A small well to the south-east of the Jami Masjid, partly underground and vaulted over. In use.
- III. (202) Rāffā ki Bāori, 167.—A large square well; of no interest.
- III. (203) Pēti Bāori, 171.—An old well with steps leading down to it; of no account.
- III. (204) The Hal Bāori, 180.—A partly ruined well, being, like most of them, a converted quarry hole. The lower part of the descent is very dangerous, the steps having fallen away. A rumour says that at a certain time of the year it is covered and surrounded by myriads of little lights (fire-flies?) and no one knows how they come there. Damo Rumour also has it that three men are drowned in it every twelve years. With the very unsafe state of the descent this is not very extraordinary.

- III. (205) Tho Bari Bānri, 200.—This is to the south of the Jami Masjid and not far from the walls of the town. It was one of the largest, but is now silted up.
- III. (206) Muharak Khān ki Bānri, 201.—This is near the last and was intended to supply water to the water pavilion of Muharak Khān, which is close by.
- III. (207) Jami Masjid ki Bāori, 202.—This is a large tank immediately on the south of the Jami Masjid, and evidently built in connection with that building. This was supplied from the Bari Bāori through earthenware pipes, and from this water passed on under the south wing of the masjid into the reservoir in the quadrangle within. The line of pipes may be traced by the narrow-shaft wells, or usdies, along its course.
- III. (208) Bashir Bāori, 215.—An old well of no account.
- III. (209) Nagar Bāori, 217.—This is a short distance north of Kamāl Khān Bazar, in the fields. It is now used for irrigation purposes. Down below, near the surface of the water is a deep arcade running round the four sides of the well with three arches in each face.
- III. (210) Bāori, 254.—A ruined well out in front of Ikhlas Khān's mosque with arched rooms in it. Of no particular interest.
- III. (211) Masa Bāori, 258.—An ordinary well north of the Gol Gumbaz, with a broad arch over the flight of steps which lead down to the water's edge on the west side.
- III. (212) The Nim Bāori, 260.—A small square tank with a flight of steps on the south side, and an inscription in Devanagari in the north wall.
- IIa. (213) Water Towers, 61, 67, 91, and 115 are all on the line of the Begam Talāv conduit, and have been built at intervals along its course to relieve the pressure in the earthen pipes. The pipe enters the city, passing under the walls, close to water tower No. 61 and passes on to 67, thence to 91, and on to 115, after which it enters the Asār Mahāl reservoir, where it mixes with the Thorweh water which flows in from water tower No. 114. From the inscriptions upon Nos. 67, 91, and 115 we learn that this work was carried out by Afzal Khān during the time of Sultan Muhammad.
- IIa. (214) Water Tower, 114.—This is supposed to be on the Thorweh conduit, which enters the city by the Makkā Gate, passes the front of the Taj Bāori, and continues thence by the "Two Sisters" to the 'Asār Mahāl.
- IIa. (215) Water Tower, 142.—This is said to have been supplied from the 'Asār Mahāl.
- IIa. (216) Water Tower, 147.—Said to be on the Begam Talāv water-course. It is situated opposite the Bari Kamān.
- III. (217) Water Tower, 209.—Water tower broken down, apparently of late; of no particular interest.

- I. (218) Water Tower, 225.—Of no account.
- III. (219) Water Tower, 229.—This is a badly built octagonal tower of no account.
- IIa. (220) Water Towers, 236 and 239.—These are two large towers within the citadel, the former being a principal distributary tower with upwards of seventy pipes leading off it to various parts of the citadel.
- III. (221) 64.—A small gateway to a mosque.
- III. (222) 56.—A large gateway, with its upper rooms in ruins. It has had two spiral ceilings in the lower floor worked in chunam.
- III. (223) 71.—A long arcade of thirteen and a half arches, partly damaged. Two arches in the middle are broken down.
- III. (224) 83.—A small ruin of no account.
- III. (225) 100.—Ruins of a deep arcade or vault, of no account.
- III. (226) 105.—A gateway of no interest.
- III. (227) 123.—Small vaulted chambers which appear to have been part of a hammam or bath. In one corner, within, low partition walls seem to form the bathing cisterns. Beside it is a deep narrow-shafted well.
- III. (228) 125.—Portion of a row of vaults or arcade, much ruined, and used as a dar or dar. Of no account.
- IIa. (229) 127.—A lonely ruined gateway with a large slab bearing the inscription already given in connection with the account of Yūsūf's old Jami Masjid.
- III. (230) 139.—The remains of a lofty gateway; apparently the main entrance to Khawās Khān's palace.
- IIa. (231) 148.—The Bari Kamān.—This great archway, which stands upon the side of the main road leading from the Jami Masjid to the Mihtarī Mahāl, was originally the main entrance to the grounds of the palace and mosque of Mustafī Khān. It is, from its size, an imposing entrance and it now forms the exit of a cross road which has recently been made connecting the two principal roads in Bijāpur. It is much damaged and requires repair.
- III. (232) 151.—A gateway very much ruined. The upper storey had a very fine carved wood front with oriel windows, but the whole is falling in.
- III. (233) 152.—A solid masonry arched gateway.
- III. (234) 159.—Range of old W. Os. behind the Jami Masjid.
- IIb. (235) 172 and 173 —Ambar-khāna or store-houses for grain. These two blocks of buildings are situated by the roadside a little distance east of the Jami Masjid. They are divided into rooms, each provided with a circular hole in the roof, a doorway with shutters fitting in grooves, and air vents in the roof. Staircases ascend to the roof on which grain was carried and tilted through the apertures above, into the rooms.

- III (236) 186 —Three bays of ruined arcade of no account
- III (237) 190 —A small ambar-khāna or store-house, of no interest
- III (238) 191 —A small ruin of no account
- III (239) 215 —Gateway to No 216
- III (240) 219 —A ruined fountain
- III (241) 220 —Three bays of arcade which appear to have been the gateway to some building or grounds to the south of the roadway, possibly another entrance to Khān's grounds
- III (242) 222 —A small ruined gateway, flanked by two thin octagonal minars. It faces south, and is upon the north side of one of the old streets
- III (243) 227 —Ruins of some building, with a broken water pipe high up in the wall
- II b There are now remaining but thirteen of the old guns of Bijapur, or rather eleven, for two seem to have been left here by Aurangzib. Their positions in November 1858 were as follows —
- (244) The largest gun in Bijapur, viz, that on the Lānda Qasb bastion, in the south of the town, 21 ft 7 in long, diameter at breech 4 ft 4 in, at muzzle 4 ft 5 in, calibre 1 ft 7½ in, estimated weight 17 tons
- (245) An iron mortar beside the last on the same bastion, which Moore, in his narrative of Captain Lattle's Detachment, calls the "Catcha hatcha"
- (246) The Malik-i-Mudan, of cast gun metal the most notable gun in Bijapur placed beside the Sherza Burj, about the middle of the western ramparts of the town. It is 14 ft 3 in long, 4 ft 10 in diameter of muzzle, 5 ft 6 in at breech, diameter of bore at muzzle 2 ft. 4 in
- (247) An iron gun on the Frangshāhi bastion, above the Makkā gateway with a ring of small circles of inscription engraved on the muzzle
- (248) An iron gun on the seventh bastion south of the Makkā gate
- (249) A small iron gun on the fifth bastion south of the Allāhpur gate, with a face on the muzzle
- (250) An iron gun, the Mustafīyād gun, on the first bastion south of the Allāhpur gate, with an inscription on the muzzle. Sent to Bijapur in A H 1012
- (251) An iron gun on the 'Alī Burj north of the Gol Gumbaz
- (252) An iron gun on the Sindh Burj the second bastion north of the Shāhpur gate
- (253) The long iron gun, the Lamchari, on the Haidar Burj, the longest gun in Bijapur. It is 30 feet 8 inches long and has a bore of 1 foot in diameter
- (254) The shorter iron gun on the Haidar Burj, 19 feet 10 inches long

(255) A well finished iron gun temporarily mounted on the platform of Khawās Khān's tomb (the Executive Engineer's office), and

(256) A small mortar in gun-metal beside the last

Several of these guns have been taken from their bastions and have been set up as a trophy collection in the citadel

In addition to these there is a collection of small iron pieces called janyāls at the Museum. These are small iron tubes having a universal joint about the middle, which carried a ball from an inch to an inch and a half in diameter, being fixed on masonry blocks on the curtain walls, one opposite each embrasure, and were probably worked by one man each.

Buildings outside the City walls —

III (257) Mosque, 23 — Tājam Tarak ki Gumhaz. Of no account

III. (258) Mosque, 24 — This mosque is situated in Khudanpur suburb, without the Shāhāpur gate, and is called Satu Sayyid's mosque. It has two brick and plaster mimārs which were originally very ornamental, but are now very much damaged

II b. (259) The Mulla Mosque, 25 — This is also called Malik Rahān's masjid, and is situated within the suburb of Shāhāpur or Khudanpur

III (260) Mosque, 303 — This is on the north side of the road leading from the Shāhāpur gate to the Jail, and not far from the crossing of the Sholāpur road with it. It is of not much account. The coping stones of the cornice are gone, leaving the brackets bare and the plaster work within is much damaged

III (261) Mosque, 305 — A little mosque of no account, close to Shāh Navāz Khān's Tomb, and called Sayyid Shāh ki Masjid

I b. (262) The Sonāhrī Masjid, 311 — This is a good-looking mosque with dome and mimārs. Before it, in the high platform upon which it is built, are rows of vaults

III (263) Mosque, 313 — This mosque is in the corner of a large graveyard, within which are two high platforms with well cut tombstones upon them. Mosque of not much account

III (264) Mosque, 314 — This is a very good building surmounted by a dome. The mehrab front is built in with well finished blackstone masonry. The mimbar steps and the flagstones of the platform without have been carried off for the sake of the stone. The plaster patterns within have all been mixed as in the Chihilā' Aīr mosque, and have been bricked with black colour as in the Gol Gumbaz

III (265) Mosque, 315 — This is a small mosque with three mimārs standing

III (266) Mosque, 316 — A mosque with dome and mimārs

III (267) Mosque, 319 — An old mosque on the northern outskirts of Dargahpur, much of the style of Khilā's Khān's mosque, having large brick mimārs rising above the central piers of the facade as well as smaller ones over the corners. It is called the Elephant Slayer's Mosque ' A story is told to the effect that a feud existed between the mdlik of this mosque and that of the Soohri Masjid about three quarters of a mile to the east of it, and the mdlik of this mosque one day killed, with his sword, an elephant belonging to the mdlik of the other

- III (268) Mosque, 324—A mosque situated near the west corner of the Jail
- III (269) Mosque, 329—A mosque with a small tomb before it in the fields, with a very pretty façade, and good cornice and brackets. It is very badly used, by the owner of the field, as a dwelling in which fires are lighted and rubbish heaped up
- III (270) Mosque, 330—This is a plain mosque plastered within, with a long platform before it upon which are a number of tombstones
- III (271) Mosque, 331—A group consisting of a mosque, three tombs, and a gateway of not much account
- III (272) Mosque, 332—An old ruined mosque
- III (273) Mosque, 333—A small mosque, with two minars, but no dome, of little account
- III (274) Mosque, 334—Mosque and tomb
- III (275) Mosque, 314—A mosque by the side of the road which leads from Bijapur to Torweh, near the fourth mile stone
- III (276) Mosque, 315—Another mosque, a little further on than the last, and near the point where an old aqueduct crosses the road
- III (277) The Khidaki Masjid, 319—This mosque stands in the midst of a thicket of prickly pear bush a little way to the north of the Sangat Mahal enclosure at Torweh, and takes its name from the windows in the end walls of the building. It is in a very dirty state, and almost inaccessible
- III (278) Mosque 320—Another mosque on high ground above the stream to the north of the last
- III (279) Mosques, 352 and 353—Of no particular interest
- III (280) Mosques, 354 and 355—Mosques in the village of Torweh
- III (281) Mosque 356—A mosque on the western outskirts of the village of Torweh
- III (282) Mosques 360 and 361—Two mosques a little distance to the north-east of the Sangat Mahal
- III (283) Mosque 362—A small mosque on high ground to the west of the tomb of Afzal Khan's wives
- III (284) The Ibrahimpur Masjid 364—This is a good substantial looking mosque close to the village of Ibrahimpur not far from the railway crossing to the south of the city, said to have been built by Ibrahim I in 1526

- IIb (285) Mosque, 366—This mosque stands on the northern edge of the hamlet of 'Amāpur, two miles east of the Bijāpur Railway Station. It was, perhaps, built when the great tomb of Jahān Begam was commenced close by
- IIb. The principal palaces or mahāls without the walls are the (286) Sangrī and (287) Nārī Mahāls at Porwah and the (288) 'Amāpur Mahāl. There is another—the palace of III the (289) Navāhs of Sāvanur—312—near the Southern Masjid.
- III. (290) Māsāb Kī Guinbāz, 28.—This is a plain tomb of no special interest outside the city on the west, in which are the graves of four males and one female. Behind the tomb is a neat little stone masjid—29—with rather graceful corner minārs. The various surface designs in geometrical tracery, occupying the panels under the cornice, are very good
- III (291) Tomb, 31—An unfinished square cut-stone tomb within a large square mud-walled enclosure. Within the building are the graves of a male and female, and without in the open, are several graves
- Id (292) The Ibrāhīm Rauza, 33 (A.D. 1627)—The group of buildings collectively known as the "Ibrāhīm Rauza" is situated a short distance to the west of the city beyond the Mahāli Gate. Upon a high platform, within a great square enclosure are two large buildings facing one another with a reservoir and fountain between them, and between this platform and the surrounding walls, upon three sides, is a level green-sward where, at one time, there were royal gardens. The building on the east side of the platform is the tomb of Ibrāhīm (II) 'Adil Shāh, his queen Ty Sultānī, and four other members of his family. In order from east to west the graves are those of Ty Sultānī, wife of Ibrāhīm, Hyī Badi Saheb his mother, Ibrāhīm Jagat Gir himself, Zohra Sultānī his daughter, Darvesh Padshāh his son, and Sultan Salāman another son. The sepulchral chamber, which is 39 ft 10 in square, contains the six tombs in a row from east to west, the tombs themselves, of course, lying north and south. In the middle of each of its four sides is a doorway, and on either side of these is a fanlight window. These are beautiful specimens of perforated stone-work. Each window is filled with interlaced Arabic writing, the perforations being the blank spaces in and around the letters. These let in a subdued light to the interior which, with that of the open doors, is just sufficient to reveal a most remarkable flat stone ceiling
- III. (293) The Motī Dargāh, 312—This tomb, which is not far to the west of the Ibrāhīm Rauza, is conspicuous by its white-washed dome. In it rest the remains of Hazrat Molana Hābid Ullā, disciple of Shāh Subgāt Ullā, who died in A.H. 1041 (A.D. 1631)
- Id (294) Haidar Khān's Tomb, 343—A short distance away at the back of the Ibrāhīm Rauza is the square massive looking tomb of Haidar Khān, one of the generals of Ibrāhīm II, built much after the style of that of 'Am ul-Mulk's, on the east of the town.
- III (295) Shāh Navāz Khān's Tomb, 304—Scattered over the site of the old Shāhāpur suburb are a great number of tombs great and small, among which those of Shāh Navāz Khān and Khwājāh 'Amīn ud-dīn are the more important. Shāh Navāz Khan's tomb is situated off the left of the road leading from the Shahapur gate to the Jail, and near the latter. It is locally known as the Bara Pau-ki Dargah, on account of the twelve paws which support the whole of the superstructure.

III (296) Huzrat Khwājair 'Aminu'd din's Tomb, 320 (1675)—This is the whitewashed dome, perched upon the hill at Dargahpur, which is so conspicuous an object from a distance. Khwayir 'Aminu'd din, the son of Shah Burhanu'd din, died in A. H. 1075 (A. D. 1664). Afzal Khan, Vazir, is said to have erected the tomb over the grave in 1675. There is nothing of much architectural merit about the building.

III (297) Tombs, 298—302 306—310, 316, 321—323, 326, and 328 are minor tombs scattered about among the ruins to the east, north, and west of Dargahpur.

IIb (298) Afzal Khan's Cenotaph, 337 (1668)—About a mile south west of Shahapur and the 'Amin Dargah is the village of Afzalpur or Takki in which, on the highest ground is the tomb of Chingdi Shih, and half a mile west of this again is the cenotaph of Afzal Khan. This is the Afzal Khan who commanded the Bijapur troops which were sent against Sivaji and who was killed by the latter on the slopes of Pratapgad.

III (299) Afzal Khan's Wives' Tombs, 338—Some distance to the south of the last, in a grove of trees, is a platform with the remains of a large tank before it, called the Muhammad Sarovar. Upon the platform are eleven rows of tombs, all of them being the tombs of females, amounting in all to sixty three, with an unoccupied space which would have made the sixty-fourth.

About two hundred and fifty yards east of this is the Surang Baori—339, from which the great tunnel starts which carried water into Bijapur, and which can be traced as far as the Ibrahim Rauza by its air shafts which rise to the surface at frequent intervals along its route. The mouth of the tunnel may be seen low down in the north side of the well and, when the water is low, a person may walk some distance into it.

IIb (300) Jahan Begam's Tomb, 365—Two miles east of the city may be seen the unfinished tomb of Jahan Begam. The plan of this building is exactly the same, both in size and design as that of the great Gol Gumbaz. There are also the four corner towers as in the latter, but the four façades of the building were to have been left open with three great arches in each face between the corner towers.

Miscellaneous Buildings:—

(1b. (303) Among the miscellaneous buildings around the city are the sardis—317 and 318—in the Shāhāpur sulmb; the bund and outlet sluice of the great Rājālinga tank to the north-west of it; the dam, conduits, and air-shafts, from the Bhat Bāori to Torweh, and thence on to the Sarahg Bāori; the great tunnel thence to the walls of Bijāpur; the Sandal Bāori; the Begam Tank; the walls of Nauraspur (III.), etc.

2. Kumāgi is now a small village, ten miles east of Bijāpur, on the Hīpārgi road. It was at one time a place frequented by the nobles, and, perhaps, the Court of Bijāpur as a pleasure resort, and on one side of the lake are the remains of many buildings, walls and gateways. Chief among these are several little pavilions with tanks and cisterns round about them. On the walls of one of these are some very remarkable and interesting frescoes which must be over two hundred years old.

III. Here are extensive ruins of a small town or hazar, which appears to have been walled in, and there is a long broad road, down each side of which is a fine row of stabling arcade for the horses of masters and followers. From this a broad road led down, through a great gateway, along the margin of the lake and past the different pavilions. (Surveyed.)

3. Tīdgundi, 12 miles north from Bijāpur; a copper-plate inscription was found here (Ind. Ant., vol. I. p. 80.)

II.—INDI TĀLUKĀ.

1. Indī, 30 miles N.N.E. from Bijāpur.

1b. Inscription.—On a stone before the chavadi, 3 ft. 9 in. long, 16 inches broad and 8 inches thick, in old Devanāgarī characters on three sides, and in Kānarese on the fourth, —partly illegible.

III. 2. Salotgi, 6 miles south-east from Indī. Temple of Śiva Yogīśvara on the north of the village, with brick spires; the shrine is said to contain a raised seat like a Mussalmān tomb covered with a chidāra said to cover a linga. At an annual fair Brāhmins, Māngs, Mussalmāns, &c., all mingle together and eat the same food.

1b. Inscriptions:—(1) On a stone pillar set up for cattle to rub themselves on, at the left side of the gate, 4 ft. 10 in. long, 1 ft. 9 in. broad, and 1 ft. 2 in. thick,—an inscription in old Devanāgarī characters, dated Śaka 867, of the Rāshtrakūṭa dynasty; Ind. Ant. vol. I., p. 265. (2) Below the preceding are some lines in Hale Kannada. (3) On another stone lying inside the gate an inscription in Devanāgarī.

3. Tambe, 13 miles south of Indī.

1b. Inscriptions:—(1) In front of the temple of Māruti, 2 ft. 6 in. long, 1 ft. 6 in. broad, and 1 ft. thick, in Kānarese characters. Above are a linga, sun and moon, cow and calf and a sword. (2) Near the chavadi, 3½ ft. long, 15 in. broad and 1 ft. thick, in 31 lines, each of 13 or 14 letters.

III.—SINDGI TĀLUKĀ.

III. 1. Almele, 12 miles north from Sindgi. It is said there was a large Jaina temple at the tank on the west side of the village, and numerous rude figures are found in the neighbourhood; the durgāh and the old large addā in the middle of the village.

Inscription — On a stone lying near the Government school-house, and said to have been brought from the adā of Nādgauḍa. It is 2 ft. long, 1 ft. square, with Bālabodha character on one side and Kānarese on the other three, dated Śaka 1007. On the top are a linga, the sun and moon, a cow and calf, and a man standing with his hands folded.

2. Hippargi, 14 miles south-west from Sindgi. Temple of Kalmesvara in a large quadrangular courtyard; temple of Mallaya to the north-east of the village, also in a courtyard surrounded by dharma śālas with numerous carved figures, and a dīpamālā. Across the stream is a third old temple with a lamp-pillar, and a well said to be worthy of note.

Inscription :— In the north-east corner of the court of Kalmesvara's temple is a stone, about 4 feet long, 1 ft. 4 in. broad and 6 in. thick, with a Kānarese inscription in 55 lines, dated Śaka 1176, Paridhavi Samratasari.

IV.—BĀGEVĀDI TĀLUKĀ

1. Ba'gevaḍi, 25 miles south-east from Bijapur. Ba'gevara's temple is a large one, about 36 yards long by 15 wide, in a large court surrounded by a wall. It is built of carved stone and the roof of the mandapa is carved with figures of the eight dīpālas, &c. It contains two linga shrines of Mallikārjuna and of Saṅgamaśvara with a large Basaveśvara. At Bāgevaḍi, Basappa, the founder of the Lingayat sect, is said to have been born in the 12th century.

Inscription :— A Kānarese one at the door of the temple, much effaced.

2. Muttege, 7 miles W.S.W. from Bāgevaḍi. Near the north gate of the village are three small temples of Mukteśvara; of Lakṣmī-Narasimha, octagonal, with an image of black stone, and containing much sculpture, and of Kṛṣṇa Viśveśvara.

V.—MUDDEBHĀL TĀLUKĀ

1. Nalatwad, 12 miles south-east from Muddebhal.

Inscriptions — (1) Near the village gate dated Śaka 1422. The stone is 9½ feet long, 2½ ft. broad and 1 ft. thick; in the head are the Śaiva symbols of a linga, the sun and moon, a bull, &c. (2) In the temple of Māruti, the stone is 2½ ft. long, 1½ ft. broad and 9 inches thick, and at the head are figures of Īśvara, the bull, sun and moon. (3) Near the chāḍiadi, 3 ft. 4 in. long, 1 ft. 10 in. broad, and 9 inches thick, with Īśvara, Nandi, and a worshipper at the top. (4) At the Benkan well, 2 ft. 3 in. long, 1 ft. 10 in. broad and 10 in. thick, with cow and calf above.

VI.—HUNGUND TĀLUKĀ

1. Athole, 15 miles E.S.E. from Bādgūni (16° 50', 75° 57'). Near the village is a Brahminical cave called Rāvanaphaḍi, and to the east is a Jain one known as Maṇḍaḍi. On the hill above this cave are many dolmens (Ind. Ant. 111 306), also, nearer the other cave the ruins of an old temple called Meguti, of the 7th century. In the village is an old Vishnava temple remarkable as "the only known temple of its class."

structural building, though there are numerous instances at Kârlc, Elurâ, Ajantâ, and elsewhere of similar edifices. These, however, are all cut in the rock, and, consequently, have no exterior except the façades. It has always, therefore, been a great problem to know how the structural prototypes of these rock-cut temples were formed, and what their interior arrangements may have been. The example at Aihole does not answer all these problems, but it goes nearer to it than any other we know" (Arch of Dhâr and Mys, p. 67). It has been described in the Arch Surv Reports I and V and Cave Temples of India (Surveyed).

At a short distance to the south-west of the village is a temple, small but highly interesting on account of the quaint and elaborate sculptures with which it is decorated. It is now disused, and is partly in ruins, the whole of the roof having been removed. It is of about the same age as the Durga temple. It appears to have been also originally a Vaishnava temple, as there are figures of Garudâ over the doors both of the mandapa and of the shrine, and a figure of Lakshmi, with her elephants, over the entrance. But there is also a figure of Siva dancing on the roof, with Parvati holding a child.

Further to the south-west of the village, on the right bank of the river, is a large group of ruined and disused temples. The largest and most interesting of them is the temple of the god Gahaganâtha. On the front or east side of the courtyard is a handsomely sculptured gateway, still nearly entire, but only ten or twelve feet high. It is the only gateway of the kind in this part of the country.

In the same group of temples with that of Gahaganâtha, and rather closer to the river, there is a temple of the god Nârâyana. It contains three separate shrines, all leading out of the central hall.

- 1b Inscriptions.—The Meguti temple inscription is of Pulikeshi II, Saka 536, and one of the most interesting in the Kanarese country (see Ind Ant, vol V, p. 67, and vol VIII Third Arch Rep, p. 129). One on the temple of Gahaganâtha is of the Rashtrakûta king Kanarâ, Saka 831, and another is of Vikramaditya Trilohivarmâ. There are at least nine others. (See P S and O C Ins Nos 73-84, Ind Ant, vol V pp. 67 and 170, vol III, 237, 245 251 and vol IX 71-96, Third Arch Rep, pp. 127-133. B B R & S Journ XXVII 315).

- 11c 2. Hangund, 12 miles east from Aihole ($16^{\circ} 4'$, $76^{\circ} 7'$). On a hill to the north are the ruins of a large Jaina temple. In the fort is a temple of Râmalugî.

Inscriptions.—There are inscriptions on two slabs on the roof of the verandah of Râmalugî.

- 11d 3. Nagar, 5 miles south-west from Hangund. An inscription about 4½ feet long.

- 11e 4. Kelur, 3 miles south of Aihole. On the south of the village on a hill are five old Siva temples. About 1½ miles to the west of Kelur is a kot or ghat in which is a temple of Sîdhesvara with a rock excavation to the north and another to the south of it.

- 11f 5. Arambli, 8 miles south of Aihole ($15^{\circ} 54'$, $76^{\circ} 0'$) a ruined village. Several ancient Siva temples. (Surveyed).

Inscriptions.—Many inscriptions are found here and in the neighbourhood.

- 11g 6. Karadi, 9 miles east of Hangund. Temple of Basavanna on the north of the village a small old temple, the roof supported by many pillars.

II b Inscription —About half a mile from this village is an old temple of Mahádeva, with a dated inscription in the Rudra Samatsara. Another defaced inscription is near the gate of Karadi.

III 7 Sangam, 10 miles north of Hungund at the junction of the Malaprabhá and Krishna. About 1 mile north east from the village is the temple of Sangamesvara about 75 feet by 40, surrounded by a large courtyard, in which are several houses and dharmashalas. It is old and attributed to Jakhanaçharya, and is regarded as of great sanctity. In the bed of the river Malaprabhá is a cave, the fabled abode of the Rishis, the mouth of which is stopped by a large stone.

Inscriptions —In the temple of Sangamesvara are two inscriptions.

III 8 Amingad, 7 miles west of Hungund. About a mile to the east of it is Rakhasgi where is a temple of Kallesvara ascribed to Jakhanaçharya.

III 9. Nandwadige, 13 miles east from Hungund ($16^{\circ} 2', 76^{\circ} 20'$) Temple of Mahadevi.

I b Inscription —Of the Rāshtrakūtas, dated Śaka 722, over the door of the shrine (P. S. and O. C. Ins. No. 85, Ind. Ant. XII, 220).

VII —BAGALKOT TILUKA

1 Bhairanmatti, 3 miles south west from Bewar ($16^{\circ} 11', 75^{\circ} 50'$)

I b Inscription —Of king Tailapa Abavamalla, Śaka 911, and of the Sindha chieftains Seyya and Nagaditya also of king Jayasimha Jagadekamalla, Śaka 950, 7 ft 11½ in by 2 ft ½ in (P. S. and O. C. Ins. No. 86).

III 2. Bewar, 12 miles east from Bagalkot ($16^{\circ} 12', 75^{\circ} 57'$). Three old temples ascribed to Jakhanaçharya, dedicated to Ramesvara, Nārāyanadeva, and Kālābhairavaṇi, the first is of moderate size and decorated with sculpture.

Inscription —There is an inscription in Kanarese characters to the west of the village.

3 Bagalkot, on the Ghataprabha ($16^{\circ} 17', 75^{\circ} 46'$)

III Inscription in Devanagari about 1½ miles from Bagalkot on the left side of a temple of Maruti.

III 4 Turchigiri, about 1 mile east of Kuladgi. Temple of Marutideva of considerable celebrity, with an image of Maruti about 6 feet high. The walls are about 1 foot thick.

III 5 Bilgi, 12 miles north west from Bagalkot. About 200 yards from the north gate is a well called Aretinbhavi (the well of 6 bullocks), 50 yards long by 25 wide with galleries in the sides. It was built by Madhavji in Śaka 1630. There are inscriptions to this effect in Kanarese, Sanskrit, Marathi and Hindustani. About 1½ miles north from Bilgi is the village of Badgandi; in a well about 2½ yards long by 1½ wide, according to an inscription on it, it was begun in Śaka 1509 and completed in 1511, by a servant of Ibrahim Adil Shah.

VIII.—BĀDĀMI TĀLUKĀ.

- I a. 1. Ba'dāmi, 24 miles S.S.E. from Kalādgi ($15^{\circ} 55'$; $75^{\circ} 45'$). Three Brahmanical caves of the 6th century, and a Jaina one, with much sculpture and some fragments of painting, in good preservation. Also many old temples, a dargāh, mosques, &c. (see Arch. Sur. Reports I and V, and Cave Temples, 1880; Ind. Ant. VI. 354; J. B. R. A. S., part XIII., p. 61. (Surveyed).)

Inscriptions:—(1) One in the largest cave, No. 3, of Śaka 500; (2) three in Kānārese on pillars in cave 3, one dated Śaka 1446; (3) an old Kānārese one of soon after Śaka 500 outside the cave, and some names of the 6th or 7th century; (4) an inscription of the time of Sadāśivarāya of Vijayanagar (Śaka 1465) on the porch of a temple to the north of the town. (See First Arch. Rep., pp. 22-27, and Third, pp. 119-121; P. S. and O. C. Ins. Nos. 38 to 49; and Ind. Ant. III. 305; VI. 139; VIII. 233; IX. 99; X. 57 et seq.; B. B. R. A. S. Journ. XXVII. 317; XIII. 61.)

- III. 2. Nandikesvara, 4 miles east from Bādāmi. Temple of Mahākūṭeśvara among the hills is a quadraogular courtyard, in which are also several smaller ones.

- I b. Inscriptions:—A large stone pillar lying in front of the temple inscribed on all four sides in old Kānārese characters: others in the porch and one inside dated Śaka 850 (P. S. and O. C. Ins. Nos. 50, 51, 52).

- III. 3. Banas'amkari, 3 miles south-east of Bādāmi. An old temple and other remains (Arch. of Dhar. and Mys., No. 88 and p. 72; Ind. Ant., X. 66; First Arch. Sur. Report).

Inspection:—A Vijayanagar inscription of Achyutarāya, dated Śaka 1455 (Ind. Ant., vol. V., p. 19); and others (B. B. R. A. S. Journ., part XXVII. p. 321).

- 1 b. 4. Pattadakal, 9 miles east from Bādāmi ($15^{\circ} 57'$; $75^{\circ} 52'$). Several old temples both Brahmanical and Jaina, dating from the 7th or 8th century (Rep., Arch. Sur., 1874).

Several of the temples at Pattadakal "are very pure examples of the Dravidian style of architecture: they are all square pyramids divided into distinct storeys, and each storey ornamented with cells alternately oblong and square. Their style of ornamentation is also very much coarser than that of the Chālukya style, and differs very much in character. The domical termination of the spires is also different, and much less graceful, and the overhanging cornices of double curvature are much more prominent and important."

These Dravidian temples "are wanting in all that elegance of form and detail which is so characteristic of the Chālukya style, but are not without a purpose-like boldness of form expressive of stability and a certain amount of grandeur; though this is, of course, more easily observed in the larger examples in the south of India than it is in those at Pattadakal. If, on the other hand, we compare it with the more modern temples, such as those at Hampi and Māisur, it will be seen how much the form lost by the gradually growing steepness of outline and attenuation of details. The modern forms are not without a certain degree of elegance which is wanting in the more ancient; but in all the higher characteristics of design, the older are by far the finest examples."

Besides these the village of Paṭṭadakal possesses a group of temples, "not remarkable for their size or architectural beauty, but interesting because they exhibit the two principal styles of Indian architecture in absolute juxtaposition" (Arch. of Dhar. and Mys., pp. 63, 64). The temple of Pāpanātha is of the northern style, and is probably rather older than that of Virūpiksha, which dates from the early part of the 8th century. (Surveyed.)

Inscriptions:—Seventeen have been collected here, and there are probably more (P. S. and O. C. Ins. Nos. 53 to 69; First Arch. Rep., pls. xli to xliv; Second, p. 241; Third, pp. 121—127; Ind. Ant., vol. V. p. 174; XI. 24; B. B. R. A. S. Journal XXVII. 319, and XXXI. 222.)

- III. 5. Belur, 7 miles S.S.E. from Bīdāmi (15° 51'; 75° 49'). Temple of Nārāyaṇa in the fort.
- I b. Inscription:—Of Jayasimha Jagadekamalla and his elder sister Akkādevī, Śāla 944, 5 ft. 1½ in. by 1 ft. 9½ in. (P. S. and O. C. Ins. No. 70).
- III. 6. Tolachgad, 3 miles south-east from Bīdāmi (15° 53'; 75° 48'). Temple of Banasamkaridevī.
- Inscription.—Of Achyutarāya of Vijayanagar, Śāla 1455 (P. S. and O. C. Ins. No. 72).
- I b. 7. Kattageri, 11 miles north from Bīdāmi (16° 5'; 75° 43').
- Inscription:—Of the 21st year of Vikramāditya Tribhuvanamalla (Śāla 1018), on a stone at the top of the steps at the north end of a small tank under the wall of the fort, 1 ft. 6½ in. by 1 ft. 4 in. (P. S. and O. C. Ins. No. 71; Ind. Ant., vol. VI., p. 137).

IV.—KĀRWĀR ZILLA OR NORTH KĀNARĀ

I—KĀRWĀR TĀLUKĀ

- II a. 1. Karwar Some old European graves in a small walled enclosure, about 6 miles from Karwar across the Kalinadi

II—HĀLITĀL TĀLUKĀ WITH SUPA PETĪ.

- III 1 Supa, (lat 15° 16' N, long. 74° 34' E), about 60 miles from Kārwār, has a temple of Rāmalinga built on an island at the confluence of the Kalinadi and the Ujāl or Pundrī. It is supposed to be about 700 years old, and is not in good repair though it enjoys an allowance of Rs 600 per annum

- III 2 Ulavi, Supā Peta (lat 15° 0' N, long 74° 34' E) The temple of Basaveśvara is built of laterite in a court surrounded by a high wall. It is of no architectural pretensions, but is of great repute among the Lingayats, and the original building is said to be of great antiquity. In front of it is a tall handsome granite dhvajastambha, and outside, in a hollow beneath the outer wall, is a large cistern with a perennial supply of water. This was the principal place of devotion for the Lingayat Rajas of Sonda, who were usually buried here. Traces of old buildings and caves, said to have been occupied by Lingayat devotees, are still pointed out.

III—YELLĪPUR TĀLUKĀ

IV.—SĪRSĪ TĀLUKĀ.

- II b 1. Banavasi, about 15 miles east by south from it (lat 14° 32' E, long 75° 5' N) on the river Varadī, a very ancient place, mentioned in the Buddhist records as a place of note in the 3rd century B.C. and by Ptolemy, the geographer in the 2nd century A.D. It had also the name of Jayantipura. (1) The temple of Madhuleśvara is attributed to the mythical architect Jākṛmichūrya. It is in a courtyard containing also smaller temples to Granapati Narasimha, Kādambeśvara, &c. The temple is of considerable size and ornamented with sculptures, with a short Dravidian spire. The large Nandi in front is under a canopy or outer mandapa supported by four pillars. A king of Sonda, about 270 years ago is said to have found it surrounded by forest, and to have assigned lands for its maintenance and instituted the ceremony. A fine stone mandapa was presented according to an inscription, by Raghuraj king of Sonda; the date is obliterated but it was in the Vibhava Savarisara,—probably Śaka 1550. An annual allowance of Rs 4000 is paid by Government. The place is one of great repute among the Smārta Brahmins. It was the old capital of the Kadambas, whose power was restored, if not founded, by Mayūravarmā who formed an alliance with the Chālukya kings, perhaps in the 6th century A.D. In the 11th and 12th centuries they were feudatories of the Kalyāṇi Chālukyas. The succession of the different chiefs, however, has not yet been clearly made out, and it is possible there were two or three branches of the family. The examination of more of their inscriptions would probably clear this up and throw light on the history of the district. In 1075 the province was under Udayaditya, the general of Bhuvanukamalla. He was displaced in 1076 by Vikramaditya who gave the province to his brother Jaysimha, who soon after rebelled, and the district was bestowed on Barmader. When the Kalachuryas, in 1167, rose against the Chalukyas, the latter maintained himself at this place (Ind Ant IV 205) (Surveyed).

- 1b. Inscriptions.—Four are on stones set upright in the ground right and left of the portico of the great temple, and four lean against the enclosing wall. (1) on the left is one of the Chalukya king Vibhu Vikramaditya Perumaditya and a Kadamba chieftain,—38 lines only are above ground, (2) of the time of Vira Bakkariya of Anegundi, Śāla 1290, this is also partly buried, (3) of the Kadamba chieftain Kirtivarmadeva Śāla 990 (4) to the right of the temple an inscription of 37 lines of about 20 large but scarcely legible letters (5) against the northern wall of the court an inscription of Sadāsivadevaraya of Vidyanaṅga, Śāla 1474 (6) against the same wall another inscription of the same king, (7) near the east wall one of 22 lines, each of about 23 letters not easily read (8) against the same wall, an inscription very much defaced, (9) in one of the smaller shrines in the court is a handsomely carved litter, or throne, and on it is an inscription of Raghuatha Nayaka of Sondi Śāla 1550 (10) on a pillar in the Nandi mandapa, (11) on a pilaster to the right of the entrance of the small temple of Trimalladeva in 49 lines. And (12) on a slab carved with a five headed snake (Nāgendra) in a little modern shrine on the east side of the court of the great temple is a Pali inscription. It begins at the top of the left side of the slab with the words Siddhāi Rāno Hāritiputasa and a line and a half are on the right side of the slab. This is an early Andhra inscription, and is dated in the 12th year of the 'century' of Satikarna Hāritiputa (Ind Ant, IV pp 205-6).

- 1b. 2. Annavatti, nine miles east from Baurvati and six south west from Tilivalli (lat 14° 35' N long 76° 13' E). A fine temple of Kṛtābheśvara with 16 pillars in the great mandapa and 22 on the screen wall, and the following—(Surveyed)

- 1b. Inscriptions.—(1) On the right of the god in the temple of Kṛtābheśvara dated Śāla 1152, (2) on a pillar in the madhyaranga of the same temple, Śāla 1163, (3) on another pillar in the same temple Śāla 1163, (4) on another pillar dated Śāla 1171, two of these cover two sides of the bases of the columns, (5, 6) two on the edge of the madhyaranga—one much effaced Śāla 992, (7) another on the opposite side, (8) on the lintel of the antechamber of a small temple of Purvati. Outside to the south are two viragals, the inscriptions much effaced.

- IIIb. 3. Kabbur, a neighbouring village about a mile from Annavatti. Inscriptions etc. (1) at the sluice of the talai four viragals in front of a small ruined temple, behind the sluice two more and a long slab carved with mythological figures and worth preserving, built into the sluice itself is a śilāśāna in much older characters than usual. (2) on the way from the tank to the village puppala tree are a śilā stone and another on the left side of the road nearly buried. (3) at the tree—a thick stone with an elephant on it and five lines of inscription, a śilā stone with a short inscription faintly cut, a viragal with three females, the middle one on a couch below them four dancing, or flying off with a man and a man on horseback fighting, with one on foot, one slain, and a fourth with hands

- 1b. Inscriptions.—Four are on stones set upright in the ground right and left of the portico of the great temple, and four lean against the enclosing wall. (1) on the left is one of the Chalukya king Vihhu Vikramadityavala Permatidra and a Kadamba chieftain—38 lines only are above ground, (2) of the time of Viri Bhikaraya of Anegundi, Saka 1290, this is also partly buried, (3) of the Kadamba chieftain Kirtivarmadeva Saka 990, (4) to the right of the temple an inscription of 37 lines of about 25 large but scarcely legible letters (5) against the northern wall of the court an inscription of Sadashivadevaraya of Vidyavagari, Saka 1474 (6) against the same wall another inscription of the same king, (7) near the east wall, one of 22 lines, each of about 23 letters not easily read (8) against the same wall, no inscription very much defaced, (9) in one of the smaller shrines in the court is a handsomely carved litter, or throne, and on it is an inscription of Raghunatha Nayaka of Sooda Saka 1550, (10) on a pillar in the Nandi mandapa, (11) on a pilaster to the right of the entrance of the small temple of Trimalladeva in 49 lines. And (12) on a slab carved with a five headed snake (Nagendra) is a little modern shrine on the east side of the court of the great temple is a Pali inscription. It begins at the top of the left side of the slab with the words Siddhā Rāno Hārītiputā and a line and a half are on the right side of the slab. This is an early Andhra inscription, and is dated in the 12th year of the 'century' of Satavahana Haritiputra (Ind Ant, IV pp 205 6)

- 1b. 2. Annavatti, nine miles east from Bauvāsi and six south west from Tilivalli (lat 14° 35' N long 75° 13' E) A fine temple of Kaitabhesvara with 16 pillars in the great mandapa and 22 on the screen wall, and the following— (Surveyed)

- 1b. Inscriptions.—(1) On the right of the god in the temple of Kaitabhesvara, dated Saka 1152, (2) on a pillar to the madhjaranga of the same temple, Saka 1163, (3) on another pillar in the same temple Saka 1163 (4) on another pillar dated Saka 1171 two of these cover two sides of the bases of the columns (5, 6) two on the edge of the madhjaranga—one much effaced Saka 992, (7) another on the opposite side, (8) on the lintel of the antechamber of a small temple of Parvati. Outside to the south are two viragals, the inscriptions much effaced

- 11b. 3. Kuntur, a neighbouring village about a mile from Annavatti. Inscriptions, etc (1) at the sluice of the taldi four viragals in front of a small ruined temple behind the sluice two more and a long slab carved with mythological figures and worth preserving built into the sluice itself is a śilā in much older characters than usual (2) on the way from the tank to the village puppala tree are a sati stone and another on the left side of the road nearly buried (3) at the tree—a thick stone with an elephant on it and five lines of inscription, a sati stone with a short inscription faintly cut, a viragal with three females the middle one on a couch below them four dancing or flying off with a man and a man on horseback fighting with one on foot, one slain, and a fourth with hands clasped; another with linga above, next a devī and attendants, and below a fight, and 16 lines of inscription. (4) at an old Jaina basti are four stones all partially weathered and one of the two largest split; each has a Jina with two chauris and sun and moon at the top; the two large ones have long inscriptions; inside is a section of an inscription partially effaced by grinding keśara on it:—there are also four black stone Jinās, one with a short inscription on the base. (5) at Īśvaradeva's temple is a sort of double virgal, there being two compartments across and three vertically with 11 lines of inscription; inside on the base of a pillar is one of 14 lines. The roof has an elaborately carved slab over the central area with Śiva in the tāṇḍava attitude in the centre and the 8 dikpālas on the sides. In the left aisle of the mandapa, on a long vedi are the saptamātṛis with Ganapati and Śiva, also a spirited Mahishāsura-mardani to the right of the shrine door, in which she has got the asura by the arm and has made a great gash in his side with a broad-pointed spear; outside to the right is a stone with a kalāṣa on it and 4 lines of inscription; and a split śilāśāsanam. (6) at Mallāradeva's temple is a thick slab with an elephant and 5 lines of inscription.

- III. 4. Sonda (lat. 14° 44' N., long. 74° 52' E.). (1) Three miles west of the Sonḍā station is the temple of Trivikrama said to be about 400 years old. It consists of one central room with surrounding verandas. The central room is in the shape of a car with four wheels (two of which are broken), drawn by two elephants. It has a tall dhvajastambha in front. Tradition says that one of the eight monks of the Udapi maṭha in South Kānara, called Vaddirāja Svāmi, of great repute for his austerity, was aided by a spirit named Nārāyaṇa-Bhūta, who removed this temple entire from Bhadrakārama to Sonḍā, and the monk installed Trivikramadeva therein. A car festival is celebrated every year: the temple is also endowed. (2) At Hunaschond, half a mile from the Sonḍā station, is Kālinaṭha or Rājendramatṛha, a Lingāyat monastery, founded some three or four hundred years ago by the Sonḍā Rājās. It is constructed with very large stone slabs.

V.—KUMTĀ TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Gokarna, (lat. 14° 32' N., long. 74° 23' E.) on the coast about 10 miles north of Kumtā. The most famous Uṛtha or place of pilgrimage in this part of India. It contains several temples built probably about A.D. 1100. (1) The temple of Mahābalesvara. This has two courts, an outer and an inner, with corridors inside the walls for the accommodation of pilgrims and devotees. The temple itself consists of mandapa and shrine, the latter surmounted by a low spire. Thousands of pilgrims flock to the annual fair held in the month of Māgha, which concludes with the drawing of a huge idol car elaborately carved.

his name three times before placing it on the ground. No sooner was he gone, however, than the boy called his name three and set down the linga. Returning, the giant saw the trick that had been played him, and applied his utmost strength to pull it up, but in vain, so he called it Mahābhaleśvara. He is said to have broken off four pieces and thrown them towards Murdeśvara, Ganavantesvara, Dhīreśvara and Shajeshvara, where there are also temples (see Buchanan's Mysore, &c). Annual allowances are paid to the temple.

III

(2) The temple of Bhadrakali in the east of the town is a small one in a courtyard, entered by a single doorway from the north. (3) Temple of Venkataramana of black stone. (4) Ahalyabhus temple built by the princess of Indor about a century ago. (5) Koti irtha, a large, dirty, oblong pond surrounded by a decaying flight of steps. (6) Ballala irtha near the beach.

Satashūgra and Maningā are two hills close to Gokarna, and the Tamraparnī is a small stream that falls into the sea here. In the vicinity there are some natural caverns in the laterite. There are no Jaina remains in Gokarna.

IV

Inscriptions — There are said to be several inscriptions: (1) in Narasimhas temple (2) in the house of Mulman Tunan Adī, (3) in Hiro Kuppa Bhat's house, (4) in the temple of Maruti, (5) in Vighneshvara Bhat's house, (6) in temple of Śrī Tamra Gaurī, (7) at the side of the door in the mandapa of Mahābhaleśvara temple (8) in Vitthalā temple.

Prasad Narayana Bhat has a copper plate.

V

2. Dhareshvara, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S S E of it (lat $14^{\circ} 22' N$, long $74^{\circ} 29' E$). A temple in a courtyard 105 feet by 69. The temple is of black stone with sculptures on the walls. An allowance of Rs 1,440 is made to it annually by Government.

Inscriptions — Four stone tablets, from one of which it appears that it was founded by Rudroji Pandit, son of Nagoji and built by Snappa.

VII

1. Siddapur Inscriptions, &c — A mile west from the town at Hosūr, at a small rude temple near the wayside are two carved stones. Two more stand about a dozen yards west of it, one of them very elaborately carved. At the bottom is a man carried in a litter, with traces of inscription. And a fifth stands close to the road leading to Jog. At the temple of Ganapati in Siddapur is a Kānarese inscription, 5' 6" by 2' 10" in 43 lines, dated Śaka 1574 Kāra Sampatsara. And at Rāmesvara at the site of an old temple in the jungle $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles N E from the town are two carved slabs, one 4' 7" by 2' 10", with short inscriptions much obliterated.

VIII

2. Bilgi, about 8 miles from Siddapur (lat $14^{\circ} 22' N$ long $74^{\circ} 53' E$). It was formerly known by the name of Sveta pur, and is said to have been founded by a son of Narasimha, a Jaina prince, who ruled at Hosūr (near Siddapur) about Śaka 1515. (1) The Jaina basti of Parsvanatha is said to have been built by the founder of the town and afterwards extended by a Juna prince Gbantevadīa, the son of Rāghapartīja in Śaka 1573, when images of Nemnātha, Pārśvanātha and Vardhamāna were consecrated. It is in the Dravidian style. The shrine walls are formed of slabs the whole height of the walls, with square pillars at the corners and in the middle to give them support. The upper part of the walls of the maṇḍapa are formed in the same way, set on a carved screen wall. The outer maṇḍapa has four round black stone pillars somewhat of the style of those at Belgaum; at each side of this maṇḍapa is a small shrine. From the two śilāśannas still standing it appears that a grant was made of the revenues of 9 villages amounting to Rs. 1,772-7-8, and lands yielding 300 khaṇḍis of rice were allotted to it. It has a flat roof supported by carved basalt pillars. (2)

III. There is also a temple of Virūpāksha and another near the town, very plain buildings. (Surveyed.)

II b. Inscriptions:—(1) At Virūpāksha temple to the right of the entrance is a slab 5' 10" by 3' 1" with a līṅga at the top attended by a female on the left with damaru and bell, and with cow and calf to the right, the usual figures of sun, moon, and kufār above. The inscription is in 42 lines dated Śaka 1493 (in words) Prāmōḍi (? Pramōḍi) Saṃvatsara. (2) Inside the door of Pārśvanātha basti are two large slabs with the usual Jain symbol, and in excellent preservation, one measures 6' 9" by 2' 6" in 78½ lines, Śaka 1510, Sarvajit Saṃvatsara; (3) the other 6' 10" by 2' 7" in 81½ lines, Śaka 1550, Nandan Saṃvatsara. (4) On the other side of the road at a temple of Hanumān is a smaller inscription much defaced.

III. 3. Baidarkanni on the road from Bilgi to Siddāpur. A quarter of a mile east of the village, and a little south from the road, is a group of 16 carved stones (three of them broken), some of them very tall and covered with carving of worship, festivity, and war. Near a small basti a little to the south-east from these are two more; and in the mud wall of the basti are four with līṅga emblems at the top; a fifth is a little way off in front on a small platform, and a sixth at the foot of a tree close to the basti.

III. 4. Ittige, 3 miles west of Bilgi. Temple of Rāmeśvara, a building of the usual modern construction, enjoys an annual cash allowance of Rs. 1,000. This is a place of considerable repute, and has a large annual fair attended by numerous devotees.

VII.—HONAVAR TALUKA.

III. 1. Honavar seems to have no remains of note. There is an old ruined fort, on the west side of which the Portuguese had their warehouses in early times. Basavarajadurga to the north is said to have been built by the same king as built Chāpḍavar. The temple of Rāmsiṅga, about 1½ miles north of the town, is said to be two or three centuries old. (Surveyed) they have been thrown across to form the roadway, discloses three very large inscription slabs, covered with old Kānarese writing, and one sculptured vṛga of the style of the Murdeśvara ones, also bearing inscriptions upon the alternate hands. Besides these, there are several large sculptured slabs covered with ornament and figures in bas-relief. In the culvert over the chāmbār-kā-nālā is built in another inscribed slab, and a fourth is inserted in the culvert called the Gundi Bail culvert.

At Bhatkal and Honāvar, and very commonly in the Konkan, are found odd-looking groups of curious stones crowded together under a tree, upon a hill side, or in a garden. They are generally of two forms, one a small pillar or cylinder of various degrees of finish, round or octagonal, with or without a finial, and snake stones,—that is, small slabs with knotted or single snakes carved upon them in relief. Sometimes other carved stones are added bearing small human figures in relief. These stones are called jetigds and are, in most cases, worshipped once a year by Brāhmaṇ pūjāris attached to some neighbouring temple. It is difficult to find out what they mean, but it is certain they are connected with the worship or appeasing of the spirits of departed ancestors which are represented by these stones, and the setting up and occasional attention to them is by way of propitiating those restless spirits and keeping them in good temper, they being a particularly jealous and vindictive lot. The snake stones here do not seem to have any special connection, if any at all, with the annual snake worship at the Nāgapanakāmi festival. Tree worship is also very prevalent in these parts, more especially the pippala and tulasi. They are cared for and protected from injury, around the trunks of the former being built square, octagonal or circular platforms upon which daily circumambulatory ceremonies are performed. The tulasi, being a small plant, is generally placed in a receptacle upon the top of a high altar or pedestal within the courtyards of temples and private houses.

III. 2. Chandāvar, about 5 miles south-east from Kumtā (lat. 14° 24' N., long. 74° 33' E.), is a deserted city, said to have been built by a king Sarpanmahika by birth a cowherd, who rose to rank by magic. It passed from the possession of the Svādī kings to that of the Muhammadans. The last Muhammadan prince dying without issue in A.D. 1686, it declined and is now deserted, and the stones are being carried away for building purposes.

III. 3. Hoigudna, a village about 12 miles from Honāvar; near it, on an island in the Śarāvati are some sacrificial kupḍas. The Haiga Brāhmaṇs are said to have come from the north at the invitation of a Berad king to perform a sacrifice for him here. Haiga in old Kānarese means 'sacrifice.'

III. 4. Bailor, 12 miles south of Honāvar, (lat. 16° 5' N., long. 74° 32' E.), has a very old temple of Mārkaṇḍeśvara. The Nāyars who ruled over Bārur repaired the old temple and made grants of land for its support. Some documents relating to this grant are said to exist, dated Śaka 1356 (A.D. 1434).

5. Murdeśvara, 3 miles south of Bailor and 10 miles north of Bhatkal, has a temple on a promontory called Kandogiri, said to have been built by the Jaina Rājās of Kaikuri (?). In Fasli 1221 Government arranged to grant an endowment of Rs. 1,440 annually. (Surveyed)

16. Inscriptions:—There are at least thirty well sculptured vṛgals and inscriptions (one dated Śaka 1336, and another Śaka 1350) near this place. (1) About 150 yards west from the school is a Jaina one, of 5½ or more lines, each of about 50 letters; (2) two miles

II b. (6.) Raghunātha-Devasthāna is said to have been built by Balkini, son of Anantakini, about Śaka 1512, Virodhi Samvatsara. The agraśālā is separated from the shrine or templo proper by an open verandah or sandhyamandapa. It is a small, ornate temple in the Dravidian style. It is supported by private donations and a Government endowment.

III. (7.) Lakars Kamati Nārāyaṇa Devasthāna built about 330 years ago, is a small stone temple out of repair. (8.) Adike Nārāyaṇa Devasthāna is similar to the last, but more ruined; the eight dīpālas are represented on the roof, and Śrī on the lintel. The dhr̥ajastambha is a small one. (9.) Virūpāksha-Nārāyaṇa Devasthāna is a small temple like the last two, built in Śaka 1487 by Jivana Nāyaka. It is out of repair, but is said to enjoy a Government endowment. (10.) Veśakaṭaramana is said to be about 300 years old, and resembles No. 6 above, being ornamented by sculptures. It is surrounded by a verandah called chandraśālā. The agraśālā is of brick. The car ceremony is celebrated every year, and has a good endowment and considerable land. (11.) Śīrāle Sambhuhāga Devasthāna is a modern temple built on the site of an older one. Legend accounts for its origin as for that of many others by the story of a man who accused his herdboy for milking his cow. The boy protested his innocence, but watched the cow, who went into a thicket and poured her milk upon a burrow. The owner, being informed of this, dug up the place and found a liṅga, over which he built a temple.

I b. (12.) Jattapa Nāyakana Chandranātheśvara-Basti is the largest Jaina temple here. It stands in an open space surrounded by an old wall, and consists of an agraśālā, bhogamandapa and basti; the latter is of two storeys, the lower being of larger area than the one above. Each storey has three rooms, which are said to have contained images of Ara, Malli, Munisuvrata, Nama, Nemi, and Pārśva, but only fragments of them are left. The walls of the bhogamandapa on the west of the basti are pierced with beautiful windows; the agraśālā or shrine is of two storeys, each of two rooms, which contained images of Rishabha, Ajakasambhava, Ahhinanda, and Chandranātheśvara. There are also dhārāpālas at the door. The total length is about 112 feet and breadth of the shrine 40, of the basti 50 feet. The dhr̥ajastambha is a very elegant pillar and stands on a platform about 14 feet square: the shaft is of a single block 21 feet 6 inches in height, and is surmounted by a quadrangular capital. Behind the basti is a smaller pillar called Yakṣabrahmakhaṁba, the shaft of which is 19 feet in length. It stands on a platform with four smaller pillars at the corners, with lintels laid over them. Jattapa Nāyaka made over lands for the support of the temple, but they are said to have been confiscated by Tipu Sultan. This is the finest old temple at Bhatkal, and should be preserved: the villagers used to carry off the fine stone slabs at pleasure.

III. (13.) Pārśvanātheśvara-Basti is 58 feet long by 18 wide. According to an inscription it was built in Śaka 1465. The dhr̥ajastambha is a fine pillar on a lofty moulded base, and the small mandapa atop contains a four-headed image.

III. (14.) Śānteśvara-Basti is somewhat like No 12. Other remains of Jaina temples and inscriptions exist. (15.) The Jnni Masjid is tile-roofed, but said to be very old. It enjoys a Government allowance of Rs. 400 a year. (16.) Sultan Pallo Masjid is about 200 years old. The buildings here have all sloping roofs.

I a.

There are three European graves situated on the north bank of the creek, part of the way between Bhatkal and the sea. The upper slabs of each, which are single stones, contain old English inscriptions deeply cut in large letters fairly well formed. They are as follows:—

There are several combination letters in the inscriptions formed much in the same manner as diphthongs are usually printed, H and E, V and E, and A and N. In the last combination they resemble a W upside down with a cross stroke in the first angle to form the A, the cross stroke of the N then becomes reversed. In 1637 the English started a factory at Bhatkal, and it is to this time that belong the three English tombs. There are many old European tombs scattered throughout the country, and a complete list of them with copies of any quaint inscription is a desideratum.

jambul bush is a fine large sasanam with Jaina symbols, 5 10" by 2 8", (19) another close beside it, 6 9" by 2 4½", (20) at Lakars Kīmatī Lakshmi Nārāyaṇa temple, 6 9" by 2 4½", of which 1' 9½" is covered with inscription partially effaced, (21) on a pillar on the right side of the entrance to Raghunatha's temple, 27 lines, Śaka 1512, Virodhī Samvatsara, (22) in a watercourse in the street 150 yards from the bungalow, a Jaina inscription, 4 11" by 1 10",—ought to be removed to a place of safety, (23) on the door-jamb of Cholesvara temple are two short Tamil inscriptions, (24) about a quarter of a mile behind the dharmasāla, one with Saiva emblems, 6 0 by 2 5", 61 lines Copper-plates—four belonging to (1) Virūpākṣadeva Jost Saṅkara Narayana temple (2) to Pāsupatī Sambhu Linga temple, (3 and 4) not stated—in Bhatkal

III 7 Sankadagali, a mile east from Bhatkal Rāmalīnga Virabhadradeva temple, with two inscription slabs

III 8. Hadavalli, 11 miles E N E from Bhatkal, three old temples, two almost entire in the village and one in ruins on the top of the adjoining hill of Chandrigiri, all of them being Jaina shrines. These are of the style of the Bhatkal ones, having the same sloping roofs which make them look like long thatched harns (Surveyed)

9 Gerappa is about 15 miles east of Honavar (lat 14° 12' N, long 74° 44' E) A mile and a half east of the village and of Nāgankūrā are extensive ruins called Nagarbastukeri. Among them is a Jaina temple called Chaturmukha-Basti, having four doors and a four-faced image in the centre. A small sum was expended by Government about 20 years ago in clearing away grass and bushes, the place is again overgrown. It has been a fine large cruciform temple, 63 8" from door to door inside, the shrine is 22 9" square inside and 24 11" outside, the walls are all thie. There are four thick round pillars with square bases in each hall with the overhauling brackets of the southern style. The devāpādas cut on slabs on each side the doors both of the mantapa and of the shrine have high mukutas and each holds a club and snake. The temple is built of grey granite, but the roof of the verandah the stones of the sikhara, the slabs of the floor, &c, were carried off some 25 years ago, it is said, by a Māmlatdar at Honavar who was building a temple there. Inscription slabs, &c, were also carried off by road contractors and others to make culverts, &c

III The other temples here are all of laterite, and are only of interest on account of the images and inscriptions which have still escaped the spoilers. The temple of Vardhamāna Śākyi now deserted, still contains a fine black stone image of the tīrthankara, almost perfect. Across the foot-path from it is the temple of Nemi, also deserted, but with a fine large image on a circular āsana, the back of which is composed of three pieces neatly jointed and elaborately carved. Round the edge of the āsana are two śilas in Kānare letters. In Parsvanātha's temple many images have been collected from other shrines,—one of them is cast of an alloy of five metals. To the west of it is a large stone building with long stone beams and in a corner of it are nearly a dozen neglected figures of standing Digambara Jinas huddled together. Kāhasti wants the roof and contains a neglected black stone figure of Parsvanātha 4 ½" high with the veshapaṇḍa beautifully carved. And at Virabhadra devatā, a large tree has grown up on what was once the back wall of the shrine, where is a fine image of Virabhadra with arrow, sword, shield, and bow, and wearing high wooden sāris (śaśāra). Many of these images are well worth preserving and should be removed to a place of safety before they are destroyed. (Surveyed)

Ratnagiri (Ind. Ant., II, 317)

II.—DÁPOLI TALUKÁ.

III.

1. Bagmandla, a large coast fishing village in the Dápoli Taluká on the north bank of the Sávitri opposite Bankot. Bagmandla and Kulmandla are probably the remains of Mandal, or Mándan, an old trading place of some consequence. Barbosa (1514) has a Mandabad at the mouth of the Bānkut river, where many ships, especially from Malabár, came taking stuffs and leaving cocoanuts, areca nuts, a few spices, copper, and quicksilver. (Stanley's Coasts of East Africa and Malabár, by D. Barbosa, p. 71) The name and position suggest that it may be the site of Ptolemy's Mandagora.

2. Dābhol, N. lat. 17° 34' and E. long. 73° 16', lies 6 miles from the sea, on the north bank of the Anjanvel or Vasishthi river, eighty-five miles south-east of Bombay. Large remains, several feet underground, seem to show that Dābhol was, in very early times, a place of consequence. An underground temple of Chandikāhā is said to be of the same age as the Bādamu rock-temples (550-578 A.D. Mr. Crawford's MS). A local history, balhar, states that in the eleventh century Dābhol was the seat of a powerful Jaina ruler, and a stone inscription has been found bearing date 3rd Vaisākha 1078 Śālivahana. According to a local saying, Dābhol once bore the name of Amarāvati or the abode of the gods. The present name is said either to be a short form of Dābhilāvati, a name given to it from the still remaining temple of Śiva Dābhileśvara or to be a corrupt form of Dābhya, according to the Purānas, a god-inhabited forest (Ind. Ant., II, 278).

Ia

Of Musalmān remains the chief, close to the sea and almost buried in coconut trees, is a handsome mosque sixty-three by fifty-four feet in its inner measurements, with minarets and a dome. The style is like that of the chief Bijāpur mosques. It is on all sides enclosed by a stone wall and approached by a broad flight of steps. In the centre of the stone terrace, in front of the mosque, is a well and a fountain. The mosque is said to have been built in 1659, by Āi-ha Bibi, popularly known as lady mother, māsāheba, a princess of Bijāpur. The real date is probably much earlier. The local account is that the princess, with a retinue of 20,000 horse, arrived at Dābhol intending to go to Makkah, but was kept back from fear of pirates. Determining to spend on some religious work, the £150,000 (Rs. 15,00,000) she had with her, by the advice of the maulvis and qāzīs, she began building this mosque and finished it in four years. The builder's name was Kānūl Khān. It is currently reported that the dome was richly gilded, and the cre cent of pure gold. The gold and gilt have long since disappeared, but much of the beautiful carving and tracery remains. Eight villages, Bhopin, Saral, Ispur, Bhostan, Chivili, Modpur, Bhārvāli and Pingāri, were granted for its maintenance. After the overthrow of the Bijāpur kingdom, the grant was renewed by Sivaji (1670). The mosque still bears the name of its founder Māsāheba, but it is no longer used for worship. The local Musalmāns are too poor to keep it in repair. In 1873 a small sum was granted by Government to Parasurāma, the reclamer of the Konkan; it has for long been a place of consequence. A stone has lately been found at Chiplān bearing the date 1135 (S. 1078—Jour. Bom. As. Soc., September 1879.) In the seventeenth century it was a great village, very populous and plentifully supplied with all kinds of provisions. (Ogilby's (1670) Atlas, V. 247.)

About a quarter of a mile south of the town is a series of rock-temples. Of these the chief is a tolerably large half twenty-two feet long by fifteen broad and ten high, with, at its inner end; a Buddhist relic shrine or dāgoba. There are also two or three smaller caves and a deep pond thirteen feet square. Three stages on the road from Chiplān to Enrād in Sātārā is another series of Buddhist caves, consisting of a room with a small round relic shrine, six feet in diameter, and a hall, śālā, nineteen feet by eighteen, with a raised seat at one corner and three recesses at the inner end (Jour. Bom. Br. Royal Asiatic Society, vol. IV. p. 342; part. XIII. p. 47).

- III. 2. Anjanvel, N. lat. $17^{\circ} 31'$ and E. long. $73^{\circ} 15'$, stands on the south shore of the entrance to the Vāsishthī or Dābhol river: Anjanvel fort, called Gopālgad, was built by the Bijāpur kings in the sixteenth century, strengthened by Śivāji about 1660, and improved by his son Sambhāji (1681-1689). It stands on a gently sloping point on the south shore of the creek entrance half a mile from Anjanvel. It covers seven acres, and is surrounded on three sides by the sea, and on the fourth by a deep ditch now partly filled. (Government List of Civil Forts, 1862.) There is no complete line of outworks, only one or two covered ways leading down to batteries. (Nairne's MS.) The fort walls built of stone and mortar are very strong, about twenty feet high and eight thick, with twelve bastions at some distance from each other, until very lately armed with cannon. South of the fort is a deep trench eighteen feet broad. There are two gates to the east and to the west. On either side of the west gate is a guardroom. The interior of the fort still has traces of small houses. There are also three wells, with a plentiful supply of water. Near the wells is a building said to have been the store-room, close to it a granary, and, at a little distance, the governor's palace. Some Persian verses on a flat oblong stone give the date 1707, and the builder's name Sidi Sayyid. The verses are: 'Whoever built a new mansion, when he was called away, did it not belong to another? God is immortal and all else subject to death. When the kind king, the light of the world, ordered, the fort was made which he could not live to see. Sidi Sayyid (built) the fort. Written on the 10th of Zil Hājj the first year of the reign, Hijra 1119 (1707 A.D.).'

V.—SANGAMESVARA TALUKA.

- IV. Sangamesvara, N. lat. $17^{\circ} 9'$ and E. long. $73^{\circ} 66'$, a town on the Śāstri river, about twenty miles from the coast,—the meeting of the Alaknandā and Varuṇā, is a place of some sanctity and of high antiquity. According to the Sahyādri Khanda it was originally called Rāmakshetra and had temples built by Parasurāma or Bhārgava Rāma. In later times, perhaps about the seventh century, a Chālukya king Karṇa, coming from Karavira or Kolhāpur, made Sangamesvara his headquarters, and, founding a city, built a fortress, temples, and palaces. The date of this Karṇa, who seems to be the same as the founder of the Mahālakshmi temple at Kolhāpur (J. B. B. R. A. S., vol. XI p. 100), has not yet been fixed. The style of building is supposed (J. B. R. A. S., vol. XI p. 107) to point to some time about the 8th century A.D. At the same time, according to some verses in the Kolhāpur Mahālakshmi temple, Karṇa flourished about 100 A.D. (30 Śālidhan) (J. B.

B. R. A. S., vol. XI, p. 101), and according to the Saṅgameśvara Māhātmya he became king in 178 (S. 100). (J. B. B. R. A. S., vol. XI, p. 99.) Of the temples, one, called Karṇeśvara after its founder, remains. Saṅgameśvara continued for some time the headquarters of a Chālukya chief. It is mentioned in a Chālukya grant probably of the eleventh or twelfth century. In the fourteenth century it was for long the residence of Basavā, the founder of the Lingāyat sect. Two miles up the river, in old Saṅgameśvara, called the kasbā to distinguish it from the new town, peth, are several interesting temples. The chief of them is the temple of Karṇeśvara already referred to. But the shrine of the Saṅgameśvara temple is said to be older dating from as far back as Paraśurāma's time. (J. B. B. R. A. S., 100.) According to Lieut. Dowell (1829) Karṇa repaired temples originally built by Paraśurāma. Mr. Dowell noticed that the chief temple was of the same age and style as the Kolhāpur temple. There were then (1829) the remains of over a hundred ruined shrines.—(Bom. Rev. Rec. 225 of 1851, 2730.) Karṇa is said to have built or repaired 360 temples and granted the revenues of many villages for their support. Every year on Māgha vadya 30th (January-February) a fair is held attended by about 1,000 persons. At the meeting of the rivers are several sacred places, tirthas, among them one known as the cleanser of sins, dhātāpāpa. There are also some rock excavations here. (Ind. Ant. II, 317; J. B. B. R. A. S., Part XXXI, p. 99.)

VI.—RĀJĀPUR TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Adivra, 12 miles west of Rājāpur, has a well-known temple dedicated to Mahākālī. In her honour a fair is held from the second to the tenth day of the first fortnight of Āśvina (September-October). Petty shops are opened and about 1,000 persons attend.
- III. 2. Ra'ja'pur, N. lat. 16° 38' and E. long. 73° 22', the chief town of the Rājāpur sub-division, is built on a slope rising from the water's edge, at the head of a tidal creek, thirty miles south-east of Ratnāgiri and about fifteen miles from the sea. At the time of the first Musalmān conquest (1312), Rājāpur was the chief town of a district. (Jervis' Konkan, 81.) In 1638 it is said to have been one of the best Dakhan maritime towns (Mandelslo in Harris, Vol. II, p. 130).
- III. 3. Vade-Pādel and Sāgva, both near Vāgotna, some ruined cells probably Brahmanical (J. B. B. R. A. S., Part XX, pp. 611-12).
- III. 4. Dhopes'vara, a mile or so west of the town of Rājāpur. A noted temple; the village revenues are alienated for the support of the shrine, and every year a fair is held on Sivarātri (February-March) attended by about 1,000 people. A procession is formed, and the idol, covered with a gold mask, is carried round the temple in a palanquin.

VII.—DEVAGAD TĀLUKĀ.

- III. Kha'repātan, about 25 miles up the Vijayadarg river. On a small hill overlooking the town is a fort about an acre in area. The walls and bastions were taken down in 1850, and used to make the Vāgotna landing place. (Government List of Civil Forts, 1862.) The sites of twelve or thirteen mosques are shown, and the remains of one, the Jumā mosque, prove it to have been a building of large size. Outside of the limits of the present town is a very large brick reservoir, ruinous and nearly dry, with an inscription, stating that it was built by a Brāhman in 1659. Near the middle of the town is a half buried stone believed to have been the boundary between the Hindu and the Musalmān quarters. And in the middle of the town there is a colony of Karnātak Jains and a Jaina temple said to be the only one in the southern Konkan. In the temple is a small black marble idol, found three or four years ago in the bed of the river. Copperplates of the Rāshtrakūṭa dynasty were found here (Ind. Ant., vol. II. p. 321; IX., 33; J. B. B. R. A. S., Part V. p. 209).

VIII.—MĀLVAN TALUKĀ.

III.

1. Achra, about 10 miles north of Mālvān. Temple of Rāmeśvara. The principal building, enclosed by a stone wall and surrounded by a paved courtyard, measures sixty-three feet by thirty-eight, and, besides the shrine, has a large rest-house with accommodation for all Hindu castes. A fair, held yearly on Rāmanavami in Chaitra (March-April) is attended by about 1,000 people from the neighbouring villages. The village revenues (Rs. 2,500 per annum) are, by a grant of Śambhu Mahārāja of Kolhāpur, dated 1674, set apart for the support of the temple.

III.

2. Bhāratgad Fort, on the south shore of Bālavālī creek, on a hill commanding the Mālvān village of Masura, has an area of between five and six acres. The inside of the citadel is an oblong of 165 yards by 60. The citadel walls are about seventeen or eighteen feet high and five feet thick. At the opposite ends of a diagonal running north and south are outstanding round towers. Within the citadel, about a quarter of its whole length from the north end, is a square watch tower reached by steps. Close to the north tower is a small temple, and near it is a well, about 228 feet deep, cut through the solid rock. About seventeen yards from each side, and 100 yards from each end of this citadel, is an outer wall with nine or ten semicircular towers. The wall is ten or twelve feet thick with an outer ditch. It is not very strong and seems to have been built without mortar. In 1862 the walls were in fair order.

III.

3. Suvarnānāg, the 'golden fortress,' with an area of eight acres, on a low irregular island, about a quarter of a mile from the shore, surrounded by a very high wall, is perhaps the most striking of the Ratnāgiri coast forts. Great part of the fortifications are cut out of the solid rock and the rest is built of blocks of stone ten or twelve feet square. Relieved by bastions, and broken by one rough postern gate just above high tide mark, the walls are so overgrown with trees and bushes, that, except at low tide, it is impossible to walk round them. Within the fort are several reservoirs and a small step-well with water enough for a large garrison. On a stone at the threshold of the postern gate is a figure of a tortoise, and opposite it, on the wall towards the left, one of Maruti, the monkey god. There are two guard-rooms to the right and left, and rooms also under the bastions. At a little distance is a stone building plastered with mortar, said to have been the magazine. Some very extensive foundations are probably the sites of old palaces. In 1862 the walls and bastions were in good repair, but the gateway was ruinous. There were fifty-six guns, all old and unserviceable.

Suvarnānāg was built by the Bijapur kings in the fifteenth century, in 1660 it was strengthened by Śivājī, in 1698 it was a station of Kānohji Angria's fleet, and in 1713 it was formally made over to him by Sāhu Rājā. Under Kānhoji's successor Tulāji, Suvarṇadurg became one of the head centres of piracy.

I. 4. Mālvan (the name Mālvan is said to come from the great salt marshes, maḥā, lavāṇa, to the east of the town—(Mr. G. Vidal, C.S.)—N. lat. 16° 4' and E. long. 73° 31'. In a bay, almost entirely blocked by rocky reefs, there were formerly three small islands, two of them about a quarter of a mile from the shore, and the third separated from the mainland by a narrow channel. On the larger of the two outer islands stands the famous fort of Sindhudurg, and, on the smaller, the ruined fort of Padamgaṇ, now, at low tide, connected with the mainland by a neck of sand. On what once was the inner island, and is now part of the mainland, lie, almost hid in palms, the old town of Mālvan. This inner island was called Medha, but the channel separating it from the mainland has been long dried up. This island stretched from a point about a quarter of a mile to the north of the old residency to the site of the custom house on the south, and in it stood the old fort of Rājkoṭ. The modern town of Mālvan has spread far beyond the limits of the former island.

About the middle of the seventeenth century, when Śivāji fortified Sindhudurg, the creek about a mile and a half north of Mālvan was navigable some miles up to Māland or Milandi, then a place of considerable trade. (Nairne MS. Dom João de Castro (1538) mentions that at low tide galhes could enter the river of Malundi. Prim. Rot da Costa India, 22.) In 1750, under the name Molundi, it is mentioned as a fortified town belonging to Bhonsle. The similarity of the name Melizigeris, the island of Meli, and the fact that the chief export was popper (Lassen Ind. Alt., I. 327) would seem to make it probable that Ptolemy's island of Melizigeris, and the mart of Melizigara, mentioned in the Periplus and perhaps Pliny's Zigerus, and Strabo's Sigerdis were the island-town of Milandi or Mālvan. Ibn Kburdābba (Cir. A.D. 900) mentions Māli, an island five days' south of Sanjān in the north of Thāna (Elhot's History, vol. I. p. 15) and Al' Biruni (A.D. 130) has Mālia south of Saimur, that is Chaul in Kolāha (Elliot, vol. I. p. 66). This may refer to Mālvan or Milandi, but they more likely belong to the Malabār coast. Compare El Idrisi (A.D. 1150) in Elliot, vol. I. p. 85.

The chief object of interest is Śivāji's fortress and coast capital, Sindhudurg, or the ocean fort. On a low island, about a mile from the shore, although less striking than Suvarṇadurg, it is very extensive—little less than two miles round the ramparts. The figure of the fort is highly irregular with many projecting points and deep indentations. This arrangement has the advantage that not a single point outside of the rampart is not commanded from some other point inside. (Report on the condition of Forts in South Konkan, 1828.) The walls are low, ranging from twenty-nine to thirty feet. On the sea side so low are the walls that at one place they seem almost below high water level, and inside of the fort are masses of wave-worn rock and stretches of sand. (Nairne's MS.) They are on an average twelve feet thick, and have about thirty-two towers from forty to 130 yards apart. The towers are generally outstanding semicircles with five embrasures for cannon. The entrance is at the north-east corner. The area of the fort is forty-eight acres. Once full of buildings it is now a mere shell with nothing inside but a few small temples. To the Marāṭhas Sindhudurg is Śivāji's cenotaph and in its chief shrine Śivāji's image is worshipped (Grant Duff in Nairne.) In 1802 the walls and bastions were with a few exceptions in a fair state of preservation. Within the walls were thirteen houses, three temples, and one dharmasāla. There was, in one of these temples, an effigy of the Marāṭhā monarch, Śivāji, held in the greatest veneration. (Gov. List of Civil Forts, 1862.) The image is of stone. The head is covered with a silver mask, or, on high days, with a gold one. In the stone of the walls prints of Śivāji's hands and feet are held in reverence and protected by small temples. (Nairne's MS.) But for their exceeding smallness these imprints are very accurate representations of a hand and foot. (Mr. R. B. Worthington, C. S.) Monday is the chief day for Śivāji's worship and the Kolhāpur chief sends turbans and other presents. The shrine is seldom visited by pilgrims and is not honoured by a fair.—(Mr. G. Vidal, C. S.)

III. 5. Masura, about half-way between Mālva and Māland or Milandi on the Khālāvli creek, has been identified with the Muziris of Ptolemy and the Periplus, then one of the chief places of trade in Western India. (Ind. Ant., vol. II. p. 298.) Muziris was probably further south on the Kānarā or Malabār coast. [Muziris by Forbes, 1783, Or. Mem. IV. 109, and by Rennel, 1783, Map of Hindustan, XXXVII. has been identified with Mirjān near Kumta in North Kānarā. Dr. Caldwell's suggestion (Dravidian Grammar, Introd. p. 97) that Muziris is Muzir-kotta, the modern Kranganor in Cochin, though this is much further south than Ptolemy puts it, is now generally accepted (Balfour's Cyclopædia, Muziris: McCrindle Periplus, 131). Yule (Cathay, II. 374) marks it doubtful.]

III. 6. Nivti, six and a half miles south of Mālva and eight north of Vengurla. At the mouth of a small creek, in rather a striking bay, stands Nivti fort in the village of Kochra. If Rennell's suggestion, that it is Ptolemy's (160) Nitra and Pliny's (77) Nitrias 'where the pirates cruized for the Roman ships' is correct, Nivti is an old settlement. But as far as has been traced it has never been of importance as a centre of trade. (Rennell's Memoir of a Map of Hindustan, p. 31.) Nitra or Nitrias is more commonly identified with the Periplus (217) Naoura and so probably with Honivar. (McCrindle's Periplus, p. 130) In 1819 its trade was quite insignificant. (Mālva Resident to Government, 31st May 1819; Rev. Dia, 141 of 1819, 2299.)

III. 7. Kochra, copper-plate grant. Ind. Ant., VIII. 11.

VI.—KOLĀBĀ ZILLA.

I.—ALIBĀG TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Alihāg.—The Ilrakot, or old fort, now used as a sub-jail and treasury; and temple of Bālāji.
- III. 2. Korle Fort, on a rock about 400 feet high running half across the mouth of the river at Chaul. In plan and works it is different from any other on the west coast. It was taken by the Portuguese in 1594 and rebuilt by them between 1646 and 1680. It is about half a mile in length. There are several Portuguese inscriptions in it. The greater part of the works is still in good preservation. The promontory is fortified all round and crossed at the top by two lines of walls with gateways and bastions, and several of the gateways have the names of saints engraved upon them. At the point commanding the entrance to the harbour is a large battery, and the level space between this and the bottom of the hill apparently contained the quarters for the troops. The chapel, now roofless, is in the highest part of the fort and close to the magazine. (Ind. Ant., vol. III. pp. 100, 181.)
- III. 3. Revadanda.—Ruins of large Portuguese buildings, principally churches, built between 1630 and 1700 A.D., also an old Fort.
Two miles north-east are two Buddhist caves.
- III. 4. Agarawa.—Between Revadanda and the seashore, on the south. Muhammadas mosque with an inscription;—also a hammamkhāna in ruins, built by a courtesan.
- III. 5. Chaul.—Many temples, tanks, &c. The temple of Sri Hingalāja—in which are also images of Āshāpūri and Chaturśringi. The temple is said to be old, but is small and covered with whitewash. The temple of Dattātreya has an inscription round the padmā. (Ind. Ant. III. 100.)
- III. 6. Sagaon, 4 miles north-east of Alibāg, temple of Kanakasvara on the hill.
- II b. 7. Na'gaon.—Inscription 2' 4" by 1' 6" in steps of temple of Bhimesvara. Also a mile east of Bhimesvara's temple an inscription 4' 3" by 1' (Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. XI. p. 351.)
- II b. 8. Akshi.—Twenty paces from Kālkābarva Devī's temple, to left of the house of one Bimā Nāyik, an inscription 1' 3" by 1". Also 10 feet to the left of the Somasvara temple an inscription 3' 6" by 1' 3". (B. G. XI. 253.)
- II b. 9. Khandala.—At foot of Kārti pass an inscription 6' 6" by 2' 0". (B. G. XI. 321.)
- III. 10. Khanderi.—A fort on a small island six miles north-west of Alibāg. (B. G. XI. 324.)
- III. 11. Ra'mdharan.—Artificial caves five miles north-east of Alibāg. (B. G. XI. 377.)
- III. 12. Sa'garwad.—A fort six miles east of Alibāg. (B. G. XI. 379.)
- III. 13. Underk.—A fort on an island. (B. G. XI. 295.)

II.—PANVEL TĀLUKĀ.

- I a. 1. Elephanta or Gharāpurī island in the Bombay harbour; the well-known Elephanta caves. (J. B. B. R. A. Soc, Part I. p. 40, and Part XIII p. 41.) (Surveyed.)
- III. 2. Karanja, on the east side of the harbour; caves. (J. B. B. R. A. S., XIII. 43.)

III.—PEN TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Ratangad.—Ruined fort with rock-cut cisterns. (B. G. XI. 378.)
- III. 2. Sankshi.—A fort five miles north-east of Pen. Musalmān tomb and rock-cut cisterns. (B. G. XI. 383.)
- III. 3. Songiri.—A fort eight miles south-east of Pen with rock-cut cisterns. (B. G. XI. 386.)
- II b. 4. Na'gothana.—Old Musalmān bridge 480 feet long with inscription (B. G. XI. 353.)

IV.—RONĀ TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Avachitgad.—A fort with inscriptions in Marāṭhī (B. G. XI. 265.)
- III. 2. Birwa'di Fort.—A fort six miles south-west of Roho. (B. G. XI. 267.)
- III. 3. Shesalgad.—A fort six miles south of Roho. (B. G. XI. 312.)
- III. 4. Sargad.—A fort 8 miles east of Roho with inscriptions. (B. G. XI. 390.)

V.—MĀNOLON TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Mashidva'di.—A fort called Māngad and 9 rock-cut cisterns. (B. G. XI. 350.)
- III. 2. Nizāmpar.—Ruins of old temples. (B. G. XI. 353.)
- III. 3. Tale.—An upright slab 5' 6" × 1' 6" in the middle of the village (B. G. XI. 391.)
- III. 4. Talagad.—A fort. (B. G. XI. 391.)
- III. 5. Viśhrā'ngad.—A fort 13 miles north-east of Māngion with rock-cut cisterns. (B. G. XI. 397.)
- III. 6. Bhaimad.—Rock-cut cisterns in a hill called Bhorundurg.
- Ia. 7. Knda in the Janjira creek, an extensive series of early Buddhist caves with numerous inscriptions. (Ind. Ant. vol. VII. p. 253; also Cave Temples of India) (Surveyed)

VI.—MANIN TĀLUKĀ.

- III. 1. Mahad, temple of Viśvavara.
- II b. 2. Rayagad Fort, 10 miles north from Mahad. On the temple of Malādēva, inside it, is an inscription in honour of Śivaji.

surmounting them, but roughly finished. The shafts springing from the seats have no bases. The central pair of pillars have octagonal shafts, the remaining two 16-sided. The doorways have had modern carved doors inserted, the cave has been converted into a Brahmanical temple. A jogi, recently dead, occupied the cave, the consequence being that the surface of the rock, in the hall and verandah, could not be much blacker.

On the second pillar of verandah, on the left of entrance, is a Pāli inscription in one vertical line, reading downwards. There are some remains of letters on each of the centre pair of pillars, though indistinct. (Ind. Ant., V. 310; J. B. B. R. A. S., Part XIII p. 45; Arch. Sur. Report, IV.) (Surveyed)

III. 5. Kotali Fort.—There are a few excavations of no pretensions or interest in the base of the cliffs of Kotali Fort. In one is the ubiquitous red daubed stone converting it into the village shrine of Peth which lies at the foot of the fort. A spiral staircase leads up through the rock for about two-thirds of the way to the fort, and then emerges and continues the rest of the way up the precipitous surface of the rock. The fort on the top is about 150 yards long by 60 yards wide. There are one or two water cisterns, but nothing else.

II a. On the hill side, on the ascent to the fort, are two iron guns about 5 feet long and one small bronze mortar, the latter in good condition. In the excavations in the base of the cliffs are several iron cannon balls lying about. (Surveyed)

III. 6. Gaarkamal, four miles east of Karjat, has a small hill fort with several rock cut water cisterns. The masonry of the fort and the ruins of an old temple below are in the pre-Muslim or "Hemādpranti" style.

III. 7. Halkburd, eight miles south of Karjat, has, in an overhanging scarp not far from the village, a plain monastery cave twelve feet by eleven, surrounded by cells. One cell on the left of the entrance has been turned into a shrine of Bhairava, and, within living memory, the front wall of the cave has been thrown down. It is said to have borne an inscription. (Ind. Ant., V. 310.)

III. 8. Ka'mpoli.—A beautiful tank, the finest in the district, of clamped stones, and a fine temple built by Nānā Phadnavis. There was also an annachhatra to feed all who came to the place. This has been pulled down, but the huge grinding stones for the grain are still lying close by.

III. 9. Prabal-Moranjan.—Varoshi Village: an old hill fort.

III. 10. Patraj.—An old fort

III. 11. Hurungao.—Bhivapuri: Tank said to have been constructed by Pārvatībāi, widow of Sadāsiva Chinnaji, a member of the Peśwā's family, at a cost of Rs 75,000. The tank is situated at the foot of the Kusur Ghāt on the road to Poona

JANJIRA STATE.

III. 1. Janjira.—An island fort. (B. G. XI. 162.)

III. 2. Padmadurg.—A fort with cistern. (B. G. XI. 165.)

- II a. 3. Pal—about a mile north-west from Mahād—has a group of caves excavated in the sides of a hill, with some inscriptions. (J. B. B. R. A. S., Part XIII. p. 43; Arch. Sur. Report, IV.; Cave Temples of India.) (Surveyed.)
- III. 4. Kol, two groups of unfinished caves. (Arch. Sur. Report, vol. IV. and Cave Temples of India.) (Surveyed)
- III. 5. Chandragad.—A fort in the village of Dhavali, 15 miles south-east of Mahād. (B. G. XI. 269.)
- III. 6. Da'sga'on—A long creek from Ghodga'on to Mahād; two old rock-cut cisterns. (B. G. XI. 311.)
- III. 7. Kangari.—A fort 11 miles east by south of Mahād. (B. G. XI. 323.)
- III. 8. Linga'na Fort.—A fort on the Sahyādris between Rāyagad and Tornā (B. G. XI. 343.)
- III. 9. Loha'ra.—Old plinth and battle stones. (B. G. XI. 343.)
- III. 10. Ma'thera'n.—Old plinth, battle-stones and sculpture. (B. G. XI. 351.)
- III. 11. Sov.—Three cisterns of cut-stone. (B. G. XI. 388.)

VII.—KARJAT TALUKA.

- III. 1. Choehl. Gambhīranāthadeva and caves.
- II a. 2. Konda'ne.—About eight miles from the Karjat Station on the Bombay-Poona Railway line, and in the base of the hill which is crowned by the old fort of Rājmañhi, is the Kondāne group of caves. They are in the face of a steep scarp, and quite hidden from view by the thick forest in front of them. They must be nearly, if not quite contemporary with those at Bhājā. (See Cave Temples, p. 229; and Ind. Ant., V. 309; J. B. B. R. A. S., Part XIII. p. 46; Arch. Sur. Report, IV.) (Surveyed)
- III. 3. Dok—One cave and a Bhairavadeva and cistern.
- II a. 4. Ambivali.—Ambivali cave is about half a mile from the village of Ambivali, near Janbrug, north from Karjat under Kotaligad, and to the east of it. It is cut in a long low hill forming the concave side of a curve in the bank of the river. The cave overlooks the river, being about 20 feet above it, sloping rock leading up to it from the water. It consists of a large square hall, about 42 feet by 39 feet and 10 feet high, having four cells off each of three sides (12 cells in all). Around these same three sides runs a low bench similar to bench in Cave 35, at Kānheri. Two doorways, a central and a side one to the right, lead into a verandah, 31 feet long by about 5' 10" deep, the caves of which are supported by 3' 9" of return of the wall at either end and by four pillars. Between each pair of pillars (except the central pair—the entrance) and the end pillars and pilasters is a low seat, with a parapet wall running along the outer side and forming a back to the seat. The outside of the parapet wall was ornamented in the same style as Cave III, at Nashik, with festoons and rosettes, but is so damaged that little now remains. The pillars are of the same pattern as those of Nāsik—pot capitals with the flat top

IV.—SINDE.

I.—KARACHI DISTRICT.

1. Thata' or Tattā, 60 miles east of Karachi, an old city founded probably about the middle of the 15th century. The site of the older city of the Samma dynasty lies under the Makli hills, about 3 miles north-west of Thata upon the crest of the Makli hills. Running from north to south for some 4 or 5 miles, is one vast burial ground which has been in constant use for over five hundred years and is still the great burying ground for the Musalmān population of Thata. Among these thousands of graves are the more pretentious tombs of the rulers of Thata. Beginning at the northern end they trend southward approximately in order of time.

III. (1) The tomb of Sayyid Ali Shāh Shirāzi, the furthest to the north, is of brick on a masonry plinth, plastered and whitewashed. The tomb is oblong, 48½ feet by 33, and is roofed by a large and two small fluted domes. It was built by the Jokhias. Sayyid Ali Shirāzi died in 980 A.H. (1572 A.D.). There are inscriptions on some of the small tombs within the enclosure, but none on the Sayyid's.

II a. (2) At some distance south of Sayyid Ali Shāh's tomb is a group of old tombs, among which is a small domed brick building with some good coloured tile work within. It stands a little way from the north-west corner of No. (3). Within it are two graves, one of which is of a woman named Makli from whom the hill takes its name. The tomb is supposed to have been built about 513 A.H. (1410 A.D.). Close by are other very early brick tombs, very plain, and in ruins.

I a. (3) The tomb of Jā'm Nizām-ud-dīn (commonly called Jāmi Nindo) is a great square solid stone structure without a dome which has been built in great part from the remains of some magnificent Hindu temple. This old carving is very fine. Pure Hindu elements in it are a band of the sacred geese, two miniature temple sikhars, and the Hindu kalasa or spire which surmounts several eight-pillared chhatras which are close by. Under these latter graves have been dug and tombstones erected. It is not clear, however, whether the original temple stood here or at Samli; more probably at the latter place. Date 914-15 A.H. (1508 A.D.). All the tombs in this group belong to the time of the Sammas.

III. (4) South of the last some little distance, and near the edge of the plateau, is the ruined brick-domed tomb known as "Juman Jati."

III (5) Still further southward, and just below the edge of the tableland is the small insignificant whitewashed tomb of Sayyid Muhammad Baghdidi.

III. (6) Next comes, on the hill, a square building with a curious arrangement of four half domes each set above a corner of the building. It is the tomb of Sheikh Jilani.

religious instructor of Bahá-ud-din Multáni Koreshi, and is supposed to have been built about 900 A.H. (1494 A.D.).

- III. (7) Further along below the crest of the hill is a group of stone-built enclosures. That on the north containing the grave of Sayyid Máhmud Miraki, Shekh-ul-Islám, from Kandáhár. Date 927 A.H. (1520 A.D.).

- III. (8) The next enclosure, which is separated from the last by an old masjid, contains the grave of Bará Mirza Isá Khán Turkhán said to have been built in 981 A.H. (A.D. 1573-74). It stands in a large court, within which are two minor courtyards. It is entirely of carved stone, with perforated slabs introduced in a few places. Mirzá Isá Khán was the first of the Turkháns who ruled in Lower Sindh, A.H. 962-980 (A.D. 1555-1572).

Inscriptions:—Arabic inscriptions are carved on the slabs above the doorways of the courtyard, and on several of the small tombs enclosed in it.

- III. (9) Upon the hill, slightly further southward, is the small ruined tomb of Pir Asád with an inscription over the entrance door.

- III. (10) The tomb of Sayyid Abdullá Jilána from Gujráat. A whitewashed tomb of no account architecturally.

- II a. (11) The tomb of Nawáb Amir Khalíl Khán is in ruins. It was built during the Amir's lifetime, or between 980 and 993 A.H. (1572-1584 A.D.), during the period that Mirza Muhammad Baki Khán governed Lower Sindh. Nawáb Amir Khalíl Khán is said to have left directions not to bury his body inside the tomb near it; and seven Hazízes or religious devotees were buried within it. It stands in the middle of a courtyard, 156 feet square, and has a stone foundation and plinth, but is built of glazed coloured bricks with a few perforated slabs introduced between them. It is octagonal outside but square inside and is covered by a dome. Each side of the outer octagon is 2½ feet, and the sides of the square within are 21 feet each. Inside are four tombs.

Inscriptions:—On each of the four tombs inside is an Arabic inscription. There are also inscriptions on the outer walls of the building, and in large letters in blue and white tiles over the entrances, but much damaged.

- II a. (12) A short distance south of the last is a ruined enclosure, which contains the grave of Nawáb Amir Mir Ahul Bakr. The dome of the mihráb is partly demolished and the walls are in a very ruinous state. It has however the remains of some very good coloured tile work. Its date is 1037 A.H. (1627 A.D.).

- I a. (13) Diwán Shurfá Khán's tomb is the best preserved of the brick buildings on the hill. It is a massive square structure with heavy round towers at the corners, and is constructed of fine brickwork pointed in the joints with strips of dark blue tiling. The dome has been covered with blue glazed tiles, a portion only of which remains. Within, the central grave stone is very elaborately carved. The mihráb has been decorated with glazed blue and white tiles. The tomb was built in 1019 A.H. (1638 A.D.) in the lifetime of Shurfá Khán, the grandson of Mir Alk Arghun, and was Nawáb or minister to Amir Khán until A.H. 1034. It stands on a platform, and is 33½ feet square. The foundation and plinth are of stone, but the superstructure is of glazed coloured bricks.

Inscriptions:—One in Persian over the entrance, and others on several small tombs inside; also on two stones over the mihráb.

- I a. (14) Tomb of Nawāb Isā Khān in good preservation. It was built in A.H. 1038-1054 (A.D. 1628-1644), while Nawāb Amīr Khān, son of Nawāb Kāsim Khān, was governor of Sindh. It is built entirely of stone which is said to have been brought from Sorāth, and is richly decorated throughout in the Fathipur-Sikri style with surface tracery. It stands on a raised platform in the middle of a court, and is 70 feet square. It is surrounded by a verandah on carved pillars, and an upper storey. The roof of the main building is a stone dome, and the verandahs are also roofed with stone; though in some places small domes have been inserted at a later date. Stairs on the east side lead up to the roof. This is the largest tomb on the hill.
- Inscriptions:—In Arabic character, over the entrance to the court, on various parts of the building, and on the eleven tombs inside. Nawāb Isā Khān died in A.H. 1054.
- I a. (15) In front, that is to the east, of the last is an enclosure built in the same style, with a magnificently carved mihrab. It is said to contain the remains of ladies of the zandur of Isā Khān. One of the graves, however, bears the date 964 A.H. (1557 A.D.). A pillared porch has been clumsily added as an after-thought before the entrance which abuts upon and covers up some of the best work on the building.
- II a. (16) On the south side of Nawāb Isā Khān's tomb is a ruined brick enclosure containing the grave of Mirzā Bakī Khān upon a platform in the centre.
- II a. (17) Next comes a small stone twelve-pillared canopy containing the grave of Mirzā Tugral Beg, over which is a heap of small stones still added to regularly by small boys. The tomb bears the nickname of "Dukāria."
- I a. (18) Tomb of Mirzā Jāni Beg bin Pāyind Beg and of Ghāzi Beg bin Jāni Beg Turkhān, like that of Diwān Shurfa Khān is of brick, the faces of which are glazed blue and blue green and the pointing is filled in with strips of white enamelled tile work. The basement and surrounding walls are of stone with some good surface-carving on the mihrab and front door-way. The door frame of the tomb is of stone surmounted by a prettily perforated window, the other four sides are filled with geometric tracery windows. There was a deep dado around the outside of coloured tiles, but it has been wholly stripped off. Within is a corresponding dado, a part of which has also been damaged. Some fine panels of the same work adorn the walls. Inside are three graves. It was built in A.H. 1009 (A.D. 1599-1600). Mirzā Jāni Beg Turkhān was the last of the Turkhān rulers of Lower Sind (A.H. 993-1008); Ghāzi Beg was governor of Kandāhār, where he died, A.H. 1020 (A.D. 1610-11), and was buried here in 1022.
- Inscriptions:—An Arabic inscription over the door of the courtyard; another above the entrance to the dargāh; others on the walls, and on each of the three tombs within.
- II a. (19) A twelve-pillared pavilion covering a grave with a ruined brick mihrab beside it.
- I a. (20) A quarter of a mile or less south-west of the last tombs is the grave of Edward Cooke, who seems to have been a merchant at Thātā about the middle of last century. It is dated 1743, and is of stone with a long inscription, upon the top in letters fully half an inch high and closely crowded together. (See account in the Sindh Gazetteer, p. 325).
- I a. (21) Within the town of Thātā is the great Jāmi Masjid which is still in use. Its general design and construction is simple, being constructed of brick with heavy square piers. It consists of the masjid proper with the counterpart of the same on the opposite side of a great square court and the two linked by side corridors. But the great feature of the building is its old coloured tile work. The patterns and soft harmonious combinations of colour are exquisite. This became badly damaged, and to a very great extent, but has been lately repaired, the missing tile work having been restored by tiles from Hala and Multan. But the colours of the latter are crude compared with the older work. The mosque was repaired in 1855-58 when Government subscribed Rs 5,000, and again in 1894 at a cost of Rs 20,500, 18,000 of which was subscribed by the Mohammedan community of Sindh and 2,500 Government. The mosque was begun in 1051 A.H. and completed in 1057 (1644-1647 A.D.), but the floor was not laid till 1068 A.H.

Inscriptions.—Over the façade archways and near the south entrance to the courtyard.

- II a (22) Upon the outskirts of the town, on the south, is the oldest mosque at Thata. It is of brick and is now a ruin, but contains some remains of very good tile work. It is known as the "Dabgar Masjid" or Amir Khusrô Khan's masjid and was built in 997 A.H. (1599 A.D.). It is 93 feet long by 48 feet deep and has three bays surmounted by one large and two smaller domes. The central mihrab is beautifully carved with fine surface tracery. Kalar has eaten into and rotted the brickwork of the walls for a considerable height from the ground.

Inscriptions.—Over the central mihrab giving the date.

- III (23) Three miles south of the town of Thata, near the right bank of the Bhagpur, is the interesting old ruin the Kalao Kot or great fort. Its ruins cover about a square mile and consist chiefly of brick debris. The only standing building is an old ruined masjid (S.G., p. 324).

- III 2 Shahpur, 27 miles W.S.W. of Thata, ruins of ancient city (B.B.R.A.S. Vol. V No. XX pp. 424 and 541, 1857). In the delta of the Indus are several sites of old ruined cities such as Lahori, Kakrai, Bukera, Samui, Fathbigh, Kat Bambhan Jân, Tbari, Badin, and Târ.

- II b 3 Sehwan a station on the North Western Railway, 192 miles from Karachi. The tomb of Lal Shah Bhuz in the south east quarter of Sehwan built of first rate brick and profusely decorated with coloured tiles, built about A.D. 1340. Also the remains of the old fort said to have been built by Alexander (S.G., p. 724).

- III 4 Bambra is a ruined city near the town of Ghars in the Mirpur Sakro taluk of the Jerrak district (S.G., p. 123).

- III 5 Hela in the Thata taluk. Near this place is an ancient building in ruins, known as the Mari or house of Jâm Tamsûn, the fourth sovereign of the Samma dynasty in Sindh (S.G., p. 324).

- III 6 Ranika Kot an old fort distant about 7 or 8 miles from the town of Sann a station on the North Western Railway.

- II a 7 Khuda bad near Dadu on the North Western Railway. (1) The great masjid built in A.D. 1710 and decorated with coloured tiles is a conspicuous building, but it is now very dilapidated and dirty and the tile work is very greatly damaged. (2) About a mile from the ruins of Khudābād is the tomb of Ār Muhammad Kālhōrā—a large square tomb decorated with coloured tiles and in a fair state of repair.

- III 8. Kanheri, about 14 miles south-west of Dādu. Ruins of old Muhammadan (Kālhōrā) town.
- III. 9. Daro or Mānik Taro, about 7 miles north of Dādu. Ruined city.
- III. 10. Lohan, about 6 miles from Phulji, railway station. Ruins of old city.
- III 11. Chāro Fort, about 24 miles south-west of Schwan. An old ruined fort.
- III. 12. Chakar Kot, 17 miles west of Jolii. An old hill fort in ruins.
- III. 13. Kot Drigh Mathi, 13 miles west of Jolii. An old fort.
- III. 14. There are also old forts known as Kot Nurpur (8 miles north of Manjband), Kot Dharanjo (5 miles north of Kōjri) and Dilaniji Bhit. Also at Makān Dunichand, Kandi Tarāi, Makor Khadi, Damach, Thunwati, Goth Arab Khān, and Goth Sari.
- III. 15. Ranyji Kot, 22 miles west of Sann, a large old fort.

II.—HYDERÂBÂD DISTRICT.

1. Hyderâbâd. Upon the plateau, to the north-west of the city, are two solitary tombs of the Kalhorâ kings, and two enclosed groups of the tombs of the Tâlpurs. They are profusely decorated with coloured tiles in geometric and floral patterns, but the colours are more crude and the designs poorer than the old work of that kind at Thatâ. The first two are in a more or less ruinous condition, the second, having no separate mujdvar or custodian, the Tâlpur tombs on the other hand being properly cared for by descendants of those families.

The great square tomb, the furthest from the town, is that of Ghulâm Shâh Kalhorâ, the octagonal one being that of his son Sarafraz Khân. These are very dilapidated, the tile work having suffered very much from bad workmanship in the original building of the tombs. Within recent years the dome of the former collapsed, damaging the fine marble platform which covers the grave within.

To the south of the town and touching it is the old fort within which are still some of the apartments of the Mirs, among which is one known to visitors as the painted chamber. A very well carved door upon the eastern side of these is a very good specimen of woodwork. Within the enclosure now used as a magazine are three tombs, two being those of British officers killed in the battle of Hyderâbâd and one that of a gunner of the enemy who was killed while bravely working his gun. The latter with the muzzle blown away has been placed on his tomb. At a short distance to the west of the fort is a smaller fortified enclosure said to have held the haram in former times.

2. Daulatpur in Moro tâlukâ, about 80 miles north from Hyderâbâd:—(1) Thul Rukhan, 9 miles east by south from Daulatpur on the east side of the Hyderâbâd and Rohri postal road. This is a large Baudâha stâpa, built of burnt brick and mud, and surrounded by a mound about 6 yards broad and 5 or 6 feet high. Above this the stâpa rises about 50 feet and has two bands of pilasters, 20 in each storey, round the upper portion of the drum, which diminishes from 51 to about 46 feet 8 inches in diameter. The pilasters have moulded capitals and a cornice runs over them, but the top of the work has been ruined. The bricks measure 16" x 11" by 3". There is no tradition of its origin or date. (2) Seven miles north-east of Daulatpur is the tomb of Nâr Muhammâd Kalhorâ decorated with coloured tiles.

3. Sha'hapur Chakâr in Sâkrand tâlukâ. Two and a half miles north from this are some tombs of the Mirs of Khârpur.

4. Nao Mubârak, 10 miles north of Nâushahrô station. An ancient mound, the site of an early stronghold. (Ind. Ant., vol. XI. p. 7.)

5. Bambra ke-Thul is the more modern name of Brâhmanâbâd, the site of an ancient and ruined city, situated about 11 miles east by south of Shâhdâdpur and about 21 from Hâd. It is one vast mass of ruins, forming irregular mounds, contained within a circumference of four miles. Beside Brāhmaṇābād is the ruined city of Dolora about a mile and a half distant, and six miles in another direction is the ruined city of Dēpur (J. B. B. R. A. S. Vol. V. No. XX. p. 413, 1857.)

G. Old Bādīn, 60 miles S.E. of Hyderābād; ruins of old city.

7. Nasarpur; remains of an old brick city, with three old Muḥammadan tombs

II b. 8. Matīari, 16 miles north of Hyderābād:—(1) Jami Masjid, built A.H. 1218, (A.D. 1803) of brick with stone cornices and ornamented with carved stone and coloured tiles, about 86 feet by 32.

Inscription over the archway at entrance of the main central dome giving the date.

III (2) Dargāh of Pīr Rukānshāh, built in A.H. 1179 (A.D. 1761-65), of brick and floored with tiles set in lime, 27 feet square.

III. (3) Dargāh of Pīr Hashimshāh, built in A.H. 1175—similar to the preceding.

III. 9. Bokera, about 5 miles south-west of Tando Alahyar. (1) Tomb of Mir Kaimshāh Kōreshi, erected in A.H. 1216, of brick with coloured decoration.

Inscription on glazed tiles above doorway that Mir Kaimshāh died in A.H. 1215.

(2) Masjid of Pīr Kaimshāh, 48 feet by 30, built in A.H. 1274.

(3) Tomb of Pīr Faḥl Shāh, 30 feet square, erected in A.H. 1267.

Inscription stating that Makhdūm Faḥlshāh Kōreshi died on the 1st Zu'l-haj, 1266.

(4) Tomb of Sheikh Bhanapotra, said to be 500 years old.

(5) Tomb of Pīr Firozshāh of comparatively recent date.

III. 10. Mirpur Khās, 40 miles east from Hyderābād. About 1½ mile north or north-west, the Honourable J. Gibbs, in January 1859, excavated the base of a brick thal. It is popularly known as "Kāhū jo Dāro" in which was found a vase of fine earthenware containing some pieces of crystal and amethyst. The vase is said to be now in the Karachi Museum. A head in greenish stone was also found, and sent to the Museum by Sir Bartle Frere. Brick figures found in a Buddhist tower at Kāhū, near Mirpur Khās. (B. B. R. A. S. Vol. XIX. No. LI. p. 44, 1895.)

III. 11. Nuh-Hotiani, about 3 miles north-west from Uderālāl and 5 miles north-east of the village of Khebrānī, which is 8 miles north of Matīari. Dargāh of Pīr Nuh Hotiani, built in A.H. 1092 (A.D. 1681) of brick, about 24 feet square.

III. 12. Uderālāl, 10 miles N.N.E. of Matīari. Dargāh of Uderālāl erected in A.H. 1014 (A.D. 1634) by Bedarang, son of Shāmdās Thākūr, of brick on a stone foundation. The floor is of glazed tiles set in lime.

Inscription in Persian engraved on two stones imbedded in the wall on either side of the entrance to the antechamber of the dargāh, giving date, &c.

III. 13. Hala, 35 miles north of Hyderabad. The shrine of Makh'dum Nuh, built by Pir Muhammad Zamān in A.H. 1205 (A.D. 1790-91); of brick with coloured ornamentation. The foundation is of stone and the floor of glazed tiles. It measures 33 feet by 30 feet.

Inscription over the entrance to the dargāh recording the names of the builder, mason, scribe, &c.

(2) Tomb of Makh'dum Mir Mahammad, built in A.H. 1210, of brick with coloured decorations on a stone foundation. It is about 25 feet square, and the floor is of glazed tiles.

Inscription over the entrance to the dargāh recording that Mir Fateh Ali Khān Sultān desired that a splendid tomb be erected, and that a spirit informed the writer of the year in which it was built.

(3) Makh'dum's Masjid 36½ feet by 20 feet, built in A.H. 1222, of brick also.

Inscription over the centre of the middle one of three archways at the entrance of the mosque stating that Mir Karamali constructed this mosque; and that a spirit informed the writer of the date in the words "The mosque of God which resembles the Ka'ba."

III. 14. Bhitsah, 5 miles east of Hala. (1) Tomb of Shāh Abdul Latif, built in A.H. 1167 (A.D. 1753-54), of burnt glazed brick on stone foundations, and about 36 feet square.

Inscription over the doorway at entrance to the dargāh stating that "when the tomb of Shāh Latif was erected by Sayyid Jamal he saw it splendidly adorned and called it 'the tomb of Latif, full of heavenly light.'"

(2) Tomb of Pir Habib Shāh, built A.H. 1221, is 29 feet 6 inches square.

Inscription over the doorway at the entrance to the dargāh "Death is a bridge that leads us to our friends."

(3) Tomb of Pir Kaimdin, and Latif Ali, erected in A.H. 1238.

Inscription over the doorway at the entrance to the dargāh stating that "it was erected by Abdu'l Rakim, mason of Hyderabad and son of Haider, a resident of Nasarpur and Puna Faqir called Ishak, in 1238."

III. 15. Bilali, 6 miles north of Hala. Pir Bilali built A.H. 1168 (A.D. 1754-55) of brick 32 feet 6 inches square.

Inscription in Arabic, painted round the doorway.

III. 16. Khudaabad, 1½ miles west of Hala. Tomb of Mir Fateh Ali, about 26 feet by 27 feet, built of brick, on a stone foundation and ornamented on the inside with carved stone and outside with coloured tiles.

Inscription over the doorway at the entrance to the dargāh giving the date of its erection as A.H. 1210.

III. 17. Kamra v, 6 or 7 miles east of Tando Alahyar, which is 2½ miles east of Hyderabad.

(1) Pak Sanghar Lora, 14 feet 3 inches square, built about A.H. 900 (A.D. 1495) of brick.

(2) Tomb of Pir Ashraf Shāh, 15½ feet by 14½ feet, built of brick with coloured tile facings, built A.H. 1234

- III. 18. Morahi, 18 miles north-east of Tando Alahyar. Mashaik Hoti, 20 feet square; built A.H. 894 (1489 A.D.) of brick, with coloured decoration.
19. Brahmanabad.—See Bumbra-ke-Thul.
- III. 20. Myo Vahio, half way between Alahyar-jo-Tando and Tando Adam. A tomb built about 80 years ago, in good repair.
- II. q. 21. Depur, about 6 miles north-east of Brāhmanābād. An old brick thul or tower (J. B. R. A. S., Vol. XIX. No. 51.)
- II. a. 22. Tando, a few miles from Tando Muhammad Khan. An old brick tower (J. B. R. A. S., Vol. XIX. No. 51).

- III. 15. Ghotki, a station on the North-West Railway. In the town is a masjid of some note known as Musan Shāh's masjid erected in 1732 A.D. It is constructed of brick, 113 by 65 feet, and is decorated with coloured tiles.
- III. 16. Fathpur, about 6 miles from Larkhāna. The tomb of Shahal Muhammad, plainly built, but decorated within with coloured tiles.
- Ia. 17. Hakra, about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Rohri. The ruins of an ancient town. (See Sindh Gazetteer, p. 677).
- III. 18. Tajodero, on the Jhālī band of the Ghāṭ Canal, at the 28th mile, the tomb of Tājo Kalio, erected in 1742. It is in a very dilapidated condition.

IV.—THAR AND PĀRKAR DISTRICT.

III. 1. Bāharaj, 3 miles north-east from Umarmkot. A temple of Mahādeva, built of stone. In A.D. 1790 a certain Brāhman of Umarmkot, who used to send out his cows to graze in the vicinity, observing that one of them gave no milk for some days continuously, accused the herd of dishonesty. The latter denied the charge, and next day reported that while driving the cows home in the evening he observed the cow stop at a certain place, and the milk to flow of itself. The owner went next day to the place himself and ascertained the truth of the statement. At night he said a spirit appeared to him in a dream and informed him that a linga was buried at the spot, and if he erected a temple there he would never come to want. This he did with the aid of the Sodas,—then influential here. The temple is annually visited by large numbers of Hindus from Umarmkot: it is only about 12 feet square and is of no architectural merit whatsoever. The same story is told of many temples.

I b. 2. Gori, 14 miles north-west from Virāvāh and 27 due west of Haro, Nagar taluk. A Jaina temple about 12½ feet by 50 feet, built of marble. It is related that about five hundred years ago one Manga, Oswāl of Pāri-Nagar went to Pattan to make purchases, and was informed in a dream by a spirit that there was an image buried beneath the house of a certain Musalman, which he should try to secure. Having succeeded in this he brought it to Pāri-Nagar, where the spirit again appeared and ordered him to procure two calves and have a cart made of the wood of the nimḡ (Margosa) tree, and placing the image on it to move on without looking behind. On reaching the place where the temple now stands the cart broke down, and being fatigued he fell asleep, to be informed by the spirit that both marble and treasure were buried where this had occurred and that he should send for workmen and build a temple worthy of the idol, which is worshipped under the name of Gaurī. It was built in Śmvaṭ 1432 (A.D. 1375-16). In A.D. 1835 the image disappeared. The temple is visited by Jains and others. It is a temple of great architectural interest. It is very similar, though superior, to the one at Bhodesar. It has been much defaced at various times by the fanaticism of the Sindhi troops. It is also said to have suffered from fire, and from gunpowder which was used by Colonel Tyrwhitt, at the time of the Nagar outbreak, in order to secure a Sodha Chief who was supposed to be hiding himself in its passages.

Inscription.—Put up when the temple was repaired in 1715 A.D.

IIa. 3. Bhodesar, 4 miles N.N.W. from Nagar Pārkar. The remains of three ancient Jaina structures. Two of these were used as stalls for cattle, and a third, the interior of which is both beautiful and interesting, has large holes in the back wall and is blackened with the filth which its abandonment to bats and wasps has created. Mr. R. Giles had the occupants of these buildings ousted, and a wall built from Local Funds to protect them. In future they will be preserved as Government buildings. A tank 400 feet by 200, said to have been excavated in the reign of Bhoda Parmāra, son of prince Jeso Parmāra, who was induced by the Brāhmins to sacrifice his son to the goddess of the city in order that the tank might retain the water.

(2) A mosque with carved marble pillars about 20 feet by 12, said to be of the same age.

II. 4. Sirwari, 10 miles north from Khipra. A mosque about 40 feet by 12 feet, built of brick by Taj Muhammad about a century ago.

III. 5. Khipra, 3 miles to the north-west of it, at Kubah, the Jamī Masjīd about 40 feet by 12 feet, built by wife of Ghulam Shah Kalhora, last century.

III. 6. Chotiari, 14 miles east from Sanghar. A mosque about 30 feet by 15 feet, of brick, about the same age as the last.

III. 7. Dher Mitha Faqir, 12 miles south-west from Khipra. Shrine of Mitha Faqir, erected about a century ago by his followers.

III. 8. Giror, 25 miles north-west from Umarkot. The shrine of Abdāl Rahim, erected of brick by Mir Bijar Khan scarcely a century ago, is about 16 feet square.

III. 9. Nawakot, 40 miles south-west from Umarkot. (1) Shrine of Razi Shāb, 30 feet by 15 feet, built by his followers about 35 years ago.

(2) Fort erected by Mir Murād Ali, about 50 years ago.

III. 10. Ramjago, 24 miles west from Umarkot. Tomb of Mir Mubārak Khān Tālpur, 20 feet square, built of grey stone and painted inside. It is about 150 years old.

III. 11. Juariasar, 25 miles W.S.W. from Umarkot. Tomb of Wahidā Mari, 16 feet square, of brick, about the same age.

III. 12. Hasan Bagban, 26 miles west from Umarkot. Tomb of Hasan Bagban, 50 feet by 14 and 20 feet high, built of brick about 200 years ago.

13. Virāvāh, lat. $24^{\circ} 31' N.$, long. $7^{\circ} 50' E.$ The ruins of Pārī-Nagar are close by. It is said to have been founded in A.D. 436 by one Jeso Parmira of Bālmir, and is supposed to have been destroyed by the Muhammadans. Among the ruins are the sites of many Jaina temples. Only one small temple, however, is now standing. Mr. Giles here found a magnificently carved block of marble which he got permission to remove to the Karachi museum; with these exceptions Pārī-Nagar is a large brick heap. Carved stones are built into the Virāvāh temple, and other places.

III. In the first there are some beautifully carved stones, but the second contains little of interest. The third was evidently a temple, and its outer walls, except for some stone carving by the door, are of plain ashlār work. The roof is flat, with the tops of the twenty-seven domes rising from it,—one large one in the centre, and twenty-six very small ones round. The interior is, in spite of dirt and decay, very striking. As you enter, you look down into a little cluster of beautifully shaped pillars with carved capitals. In the centre is a dome, the top of which has elaborate stone tracing on it such as I have only seen in the churches of the West. Round the rim of the dome, which measures 18 in diameter, are massive carved stone bosses with figures on them, while between the dome and the walls is a narrow pillared colonnade and in the walls small domed recesses with carved seats, such as may be seen in old monastic buildings. The whole is, I have no doubt, a very ancient structure and of great interest.

II b.

In the village is another Jaina temple, built in the curious irregular pagoda-like pile which is apparently commonly used for such buildings. This is doubtless a much more modern structure than those under the rocks, but it is none the less, perhaps, several centuries old, and has traces of beautiful carving about it. You ascend to it by a large flight of steps which, like the temple itself, are considerably out of repair.

III.

Very noticeable on the banks of the Bhodetar tank and in other places in the neighbourhood are the sati stones with their rude knights in armour carved on them, and always opposite the knight the pathetically outstretched arm of the lady, who joined his funeral pyre, with the auspicious mark in the palm of her hand reminding one of the stigmata in mediæval pictures. In one village, a sati stone tells of the fate of the present Pate's grandmother.

On the roadside near the tank is a mosque with carved marble pillars which may have been brought from Pâri-Nagar. Some of the carving has the same patterns as may be seen at Pâri-Nagar. Captain Raikes states that this mosque bears the inscription "If it may be injured, any one in power who will not repair it will be considered a sinner by God." This inscription, however, is not now to be seen, but there is an Arabic and Gujarâthi inscription. The latter is dated 1505 Samvat, i.e. A.D. 1449.*

* From a memorandum drawn up by Mr. R. Giles.

V—BARODĀ, AND OTHER NATIVE STATES OF N GUJARĀT.

1.. Baroda, the capital of the Gāḱvād's dominions

- III (1) The Junj Kothā or old fort, probably the oldest building in the city. In digging the foundations for a new office some gold and silver coins were found, probably the gallia paid current in the 8th to the 10th centuries, but no satisfactory account of them has been published
- III (2) In the Bhadr is a solid old palace of the Musalmans with a marble how window of singular beauty
- III. (3) The palace of His Highness Sayaji faced by a building erected by His Highness Khanderav, a curious building with a labyrinth of little rooms, dark passages and deep yards
- III. (4) The Najar Bag palace is a recent building
- III (5) Temples where the bodies of each of the Gāḱvād were burned (6) Temple of Vitthal Bando (7) Temple of Siddhanāth (8) Lakshman Bai's Mandir (9) Temple of Kāḱā (10) Temple of Bolu (11) Temple of Dhimanāth, where Brāhmins are employed undergoing penance for the benefit of the Gāḱvād's house (12) Ganapati's Mandir (13) Kām Visvesvara temple (14) Svāmī Nartāna temple
- III 2 Petlad Dargāh of Arjunshāh Pīr, who died in 633, the Jamī Masjid and another mosque
- III* 3 Sojtra Two old wells of brick and stone of ancient date and some pretensions
- III 4 Padra Temple of Āmbānāth, and others
- IIIb 5 Sevasee Contra Fine step well with an inscription (Forbes' Oriental Memoirs, Vol II p 102)
- Ib 6 Dabhoi, in lat 22 8 N and long 73° 28 E, is an ancient fortress, the walls of which form an irregular four sided figure approaching to a square. The north, east, south and west walls are respectively 1 025 900, 1,100 and 1,025 yards long and have a round tower at each angle. The remains of its fortifications double gates and temples indicate great magnificence. The stones used are chiefly huge blocks of a very durable sandstone. Of the gates the finest was the eastern or Hirā gate (Gate of Diamonds). It was covered with handsome carvings representing groups of warriors, animals, birds and serpents, some of which remain, but the gate has been in most part rebuilt in Musalman style. There is a quaint legend about a man having been built up alive in the masonry at the king's orders, but his protectress, the Rānī used to have him fed by a large quantity of ghee being poured down an opening which is shown to this day. Adjoining the gateway is the temple of Kāḱā Muti covered with bands of rich moulding and sculpture. Upon the opposite side of the gate are the ruins of a smaller temple, and on the gate itself are the remains of two old inscriptions

Within the walls is a large tank lined with hewn stone and having steps all around. The legend about the building of the city is interesting and may be found in Forbes' Oriental Memoirs, Vol. II. It is said to have been built by Siddharāja Jayasinha about A.D. 1100. Dabhoi was for a long time inhabited by Hindus only, no Musalman being permitted to reside within the walls or to wash in the tank. A young Muhammadan named Sayyid BALA, on a pilgrimage with his mother Māmā Dukhri, in ignorance of the prohibition, ventured to bathe in the tank, and the Brāhmins prevailed on the Rājā to mutilate him, and he died. Māmā Dukhri at once returned home and sued to her sovereign for redress. He sent a large army under his Vazīr, which took Dabhoi after a long siege. The Vazīr had all the fortifications destroyed except the western face and the four double gates. When Māmā Dukhri died, she was revered as a saint and was buried in a grave near the Hirā gate. By her tomb is a stone of ordeal, and the proof of innocence lies in being able to wriggle through the perforation in the stone. After this Dabhoi was for many years almost deserted. When the Musalmāns finally conquered Gujārāt, Dabhoi became more populous, and was held by them for two centuries. The Marāthās then obtained possession of it, and partly rebuilt the walls. During the campaign of 1775 it submitted to Rāghobā Peshā, who levied a contribution of three lakhs, which the inhabitants were scarcely able to pay. In January 1780, General Goddard took the town on his way to attack Fatesingh Gāikvād, who however gave in and concluded a treaty with the English. Mr. James Forbes, author of Oriental Memoirs, was left as Collector of Dabhoi till the 24th April 1783, when the pagānā of Dabhoi was with others handed back to the Marāthās according to treaty. Dabhoi is now the chief town of one of the talukās of Barodā territory, and has of late gained in importance by the Stato Railway joining it with Miyāgām station of the Bombay Baroda and Central India line. (Surveyed). (See Archæological Report, vol. II. and Antiquities of Dabhoi by Burgess and Cousins).

- III. 7. Kārva'o, Dabhoi division, on the railway 5 miles east of Miyāgām. One of the four oldest and most famous seats of the worship of Śiva, once had a large tank now broken up, with many ruinous old temples. Coins are occasionally found here. The tank called Kāyātrihana and the remains of a host of very old temples in ruins.
- III. 8. Kārna'li in Sador division; on the Narmadā near the junctioo of the Uri or Or— a sacred place containing the temples of Someśvara, Kubreśvara and Pānakēśvara.
- III. 9. Ambali. Temple of Anasūyā, the mother of Datta-Muni, a supposed incarnation of the Triad.
- III. 10. Barkal, also on the Narmadā. Temple of Vyāsa Muni.
- III. 11. Chāndod on the Narmadā, a famous sacred place. Temples of Śeśhaśāyi, Kāśī. Viśveśvara Mahādeva, Kapileśvara Mahādeva and Chandikā Mātā, mostly sculptured on the outer walls.
- III. 12. Navsāri. A palace of the Gāikvād; temple of Pārśvanātha; temples of Āśāpūri-Mātā, Krishna, &c.; dargāh of Makhtam Shāh and Sayyid Saādat, and an old Parsi Fire-temple.
- III. 13. Palsāna, in the district of the same name, has two Hindu temples "of some interest" and a large tank.

- III. 14. Ka'mrej, the chief town of a sub-division, 20 miles from Navsari, on the south bank of the Tapti. (1) Temple of Sri Nārada Brahmā with a fine image in a subterranean vault. (2) Temple of Sri Kottisvara. (3) Temple of Mokshanātha Mahādeva visited by pilgrims to perform the Nārāyaṇa Nāgabali and Tripiṇḍi ceremonies. (4) Old temple of Sri Kalabhairava.
- III. 15. Variav, 2 miles from Surat, has two Hindu temples and a large mosque.
- III. 16. Mahnva, on the river Pārnā. "A Jain temple with a modest exterior, is an excellent piece of architecture inside."
- III. 17. Unaī in the village of Khambhāliā, Viāra tālakā;—a famous hot-spring (see Ind. Ant., vol. I. p. 142).
- III. 18. Songad, south of the Tapti. Near it is what was once a very notable fortress and the town still contains the remains of several notable buildings and ruined temples. Near it, but just within Khāndesh, is the renowned fortress of Sālher.
- III. 19. Enpgad, between Songad and Sālher, is a ruined fort with a perennial spring on the highest point.
- III. 20. Atarsūmba on the Vatrak, in Dehgām, Kaḍī zilla, with a ruined but striking fort with a fine gateway.
- III. 21. Vagjhipur, 4 miles north from Atarsūmba on the Mesvā. A temple of Utkantheśvara Mahādeva.
- III. 22. Chatral, 5 miles from Kalol, has a well of some pretensions built in the time of Mahmūd Bigarah, and repaired by Mahārāv (Māhārāv) Gāikvād, the Jāgirdār.
- III. 23. Kaḍī. The Rang Mahāl and Supra Mahāl and other remains of old buildings. Temple of Yudheśvara Mahādeva. The mandira of Gosāvi Mahārāja containing some elaborate carving. Temple of the Khākhī Bāva and others.
- II b. 24. Anhilvād—Pāttan, the old capital of the Chāvada and Chaulukya kings, but destroyed by the Muhammadans in the 13th century and still further despoiled by the Marāṭhās; said to have been built by Vanarāja in A.D. 746. It contains a few fragments only of its former greatness. Very little remains now in situ, and the dismantled materials of the scores of fine old temples that once adorned this old city are scattered far and wide. Mosques, tombs, fanks and wells, with the modern walls, have made a clean sweep of almost all, and it is said to see the use to which some of these richly sculptured fragments have been degraded. The celebrated Rāni Vāv, a step-well said to have been constructed by Udayamati, the Queen of Bhūmā Deva Solanki, King of Pāttan, in the eleventh century, is now represented by a small portion of its bracketted main shaft at one end and part of a single standing column at the other extremity, the intervening space being a vast pit from which pillars, beams, and step-slabs have been rifled, to build, it is said, some eighty years ago, Bahādur Singh's step-well in the town. Not far from this is the great Sahasra Līngā (śāśv), once one of the largest tanks in Gujarāt, ascribed to Siddharāja, but which tradition says never held water, through a curse pronounced upon the king and his work by a good-looking damsel, engaged on the excavation, with whom the king tried to trifle. It appears to have been finished, for fragments of the numerous little shrines (said to be a thousand in all), which encircled it and stood upon the steps leading down to it, lie about, but the whole of the stone lining of the banks has been carried off, leaving the brickwork core in huge heaps.

On the south side of the town is the Khān Sarovar, a fine large tank, constructed, like most of the buildings of the early Muhammadan period, chiefly of appropriated materials. The arrangement of the inlet and outlet sluices is worthy of note. Like most of these ancient buildings it has been allowed to fall into a ruinous state, although it is still used by the town; the accumulation of silt, which is gradually filling it, seems never to be cleared out. When these works were constructed, it would appear that no provision was made for their subsequent up-keep and repair. Without the walls, on this side of the town, are several tauzas or tombs constructed almost wholly of old temple materials—principally white marble columns and beams. On one of these pillars is a short inscription.

- Within some of the more modern temples with which Pāṭṭan abounds, may be found fragments and relics of older ones. In the temple of Panchāsara Pārśvanātha is a marble image said to be that of Vanarāja, the founder of Anbilvād or Pāṭṭan. Beneath it is an inscription in which the name of Vanarāja occurs and the date Samvat 802, but, owing to the fitness of the letters and the wear of the surface, it is difficult to follow it. In another Jaina temple, that of Śrī Pārśvanātha, is a beautifully carved wooden ceiling and an important inscription of the Khadataragaekha Jāinas. In another we have a most elaborately carved white marble throne upon which the image is seated. In a small insignificant-looking Hindu shrine are two very old images dated Samvat 802, while in another is an old image of Gaṇapati, of the same age. There are some very fine specimens of old wood carving to be found in Pāṭṭan, chiefly employed as decoration on the façades of houses.

- But, perhaps, the best piece of ancient work remaining at Pāṭṭan is the great ceiling scroll which was drawn and published in one of the numbers of the Indian Art Journal. The work is superb, but, unfortunately, the three great slabs bearing it received very much damage when the porch, in which it was placed, fell into the river. The scroll was recovered, and now lies upon the pavement near its original position, at Sheikh Farid's tomb in the river.

At Hājipur, near Pāṭṭan, is an old well with an inscription.

buildings, and is enclosed in a fort, the south gateway of which rises to a height of 50 feet. The original temple was built by Saṅkhala Rājā in A.D. 1152, the second or Madhyasthāna was built by a Marāṭhā, and the third or largest by His Highness Mānājirāv Gaikvād in A.D. 1779—1791.

I b. 28. Siddhapur, in the Kadi District, on the Sarasvatī river, 6½ miles north of Ahmadābād on the railway. (1) Some fragments of the great Rudramālā temple, built of stones of gigantic size and elaborately carved, by Siddharāja, and destroyed by Alau'd-din Khunī, still remain, and a beautiful kirtistambha, from which, however, the torana and sculptures in the pediment have been taken away since K. Forbes wrote his Rds Māld. A portion of the Rudramālā building has been converted into a Jami Masjid. The city having been an old capital of the Chaulukya kings deserves examination. The kirtistambha and other fragments should be conserved. (Surveyed)

III. (2) On the opposite side of the river is a large square and very plain building, the dharmasāla of the Kovalapuri Gosāvis built by Abalyāhāi of Indor.

III. (3) Temples of Siddheśvara Mahādeva and Nilakaṇṭha Mahādeva, built by Bāhājī Divān about the beginning of the present century.

III. (4) A temple at the bend of the Sarasvatī to Bhūtanātha Mahādeva—the lord of demons—with a pippala tree, under the temple of Siddheśvara Mahādeva, into which the evil spirits of deceased devotees are believed to pass.

III. (5) Below the preceding are two smaller temples marking the spots where ladies immolated themselves as satis.

III. (6) Temple of Govinda Mahādeva in the town, contains two images, both of Kṛishṇa.

III. The other chief temples are those of (7) Ranachodji, (8) Sahasra Kālī Mātā, (9) Syāmji Mandira, (10) Svāmī Nārāyaṇa, (11) Gosāvi Mahārāja, (12) Khardana Rishi, (13) Kapila Muni, (14) Lakṣmi-Nārāyaṇa, (15) Gopināthaji, (16) Govardhananāthaji, (17) Raghunāthaji, (18) Gaṇapati, (19) Brahmāndeśvara Mahādeva, (20) Arhudeśvara Mahādeva, (21) Vālkeśvara Mahādeva, (22) Siddhanātha Mahādeva, (23) the Moksha Pippala tree, and (24) Khāk Chauk.

The chief tanks are: (25) the Binda Sarovar, one of the four most sacred tanks in India, (26) the Jnāna Vāpikā, and (27) the Alpa Sarovar.

III. 29. Daithali or Dadhisthala, on the Sarasvatī. Near it is Mandikeśvara—a sacred place.

III. 30. Athor 15 miles from Siddhapur. A celebrated temple of Gaṇapati, and the Gaṇapatiya dharmasāla.

III. 31. Unjha, 8 miles south of Siddhapur. A large temple of the Kajari Kunbis, built about 1858 in the style of the Jaina temples.

II b. 32. Akhaj, about 18 miles from Mehsana railway station. Remains of a kirtistambha

I b. 33. Vadnagar, 9 miles north-west of Visalnagar. (1) A large and substantial chhatra, with arches ornamented with rich carvings. (2) Two kirtistambhas in a good state of preservation. (3) Temple of Hatkeśvara Mahādeva to the west of the town, the walls of

At Hājipur, near Pattan, is an old well with an inscription.

- III. 25. Chānasama in Vadavali sub-division. The largest Jaina temple in the Balodā territory, dedicated to Pārśvanātha and built about fifty years ago at a cost of 7 lakhs of rupees raised by subscription. It is built of Dhāngadhra stone and very richly carved, with numerous spires. The interior is rich and floored with marble.

- III. 26. Kansagar. 12 miles from Chānasama and not far south of Anhilvād-Pattan. The remains of an immense reservoir on the course of the Rupen, attributed to Karna, the father of Siddharāja Jayasinhha. It was destroyed by a flood in 1814.

- III. 27. Bechar. Becharji's temple is on the north-west border of the Kadi division, about 23 miles from the town of that name and 15 miles south of Chānasama, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east of Sankhalpur and near the British frontier of Viramgām. It has numerous surrounding buildings, and is enclosed in a fort, the south gateway of which rises to a height of 50 feet. The original temple was built by Saṅkhala Rājā in A.D. 1152, the second or Madhyasthāna was built by a Marāṭhā, and the third or largest by His Highness Mānājirāv Gāikvād in A.D. 1779—1791.

42. Sankeśvara, an old seat of the Jains, 6 miles south-west of Munjpur. Here in the middle of the village is the courtyard, surrounded with cell shrines, built in old brick and plaster, of an old Jaina temple of Pārśvanātha, which has itself entirely disappeared. The brick work is much of the same style as that of the old temple at Sarotra the bricks being carefully moulded to suit the different curves and recesses of the mouldings. This has been covered with fine plaster, cut whilst wet into the most delicate geometric patterns. But it has suffered greatly from the weather, the most part of it having peeled off. Over the shrine doors, upon the stone lintels, are numerous short inscriptions ranging in date between Samvat 1652 and 1686. It is said that the image of Pārśvanātha which occupied the principal temple here, was carried to the new temple hard by, which was built very recently. The inscription upon the base of the image seems to corroborate this, since it is dated in Samvat 1666, whereas the only other inscription on the new temple recording the gift of five thousand rupees towards the building of it, is dated Samvat 1868. There is nothing of note about this new temple; it is constructed in the style of the modern Jaina temples.

43. Panchāsūr, 6 miles south of Sankeśvara, is, according to tradition, one of the oldest towns in Gujarāt. It was here that the famous Jaya Śekhara was besieged, eleven hundred years ago, by the invading army of the south under King Bhuvar, and where, on his fall, four queens with the ladies of his court, after they had made a desperate and sudden sally for the recovery of his body, threw themselves upon his funeral pyre and were consumed with him. Though once the seat of the oldest known dynasty of Gujarāt it has absolutely nothing left upon the surface to commemorate those days. Some ancient bricks of larger size than usual are sometimes unearthed. Groups of *pāliya*s and sati stones are found in the village and on the burning ground at some distance from it, but none of these seem to go back further in date than seven hundred years, and those of that age only number five, with much abraded inscriptions. It is recorded that over the spot where Jaya Śekhara's body was burnt, a temple was erected to the memory of Gujar Deva. A common little shrine, with nothing ancient-looking about it, upon the burning ground, is pointed out, with some hesitation and doubt, as the same, but to antiquity it has not the shadow of a claim. It is possible that the linga within it may have been the original "Gujar Deva".

The town, or rather the village of Panchāsūr, is a comparatively modern cluster of houses and huts, with a population of perhaps about four or five hundred souls. On the east of the village are some large mounds some twenty or thirty feet high, but these are said to consist entirely of village refuse and manure, and certainly what lies on the surface is such. A mile to the west of the village in a modern little shrine, are placed a few mutilated images which might have belonged to some temple or temples of the thirteenth century, while in the village is a small mound with a heap of carved stones about it, evidently the site of an old shrine.

44. Jhinjava'da, south of Panchāsūr, is an old Hindu fortress with gateways profusely sculptured and a multilateral tank (see Archæological Reports, vol. II). (Surveyed.)

III.

45. Vāgel, 19 miles south-west of Paṭṭan. The Rās Mālā after describing the temple of Sūrya at Mudherā, the finest extant in Gujarāt, says: "At Vāghel is a temple similar in style to those which have been described, but of smaller dimensions. It consists of a it covered with sculpture quaint and suggestive. (4) Two good Śrāvaka temples. (5) Several other Hindu temples. (Surveyed.)

- I b. 34. Mudhera, about 16 miles west from Jagudan railway station; called in the legends Modherapura and Modhabankpattana. It gave name to the Modh Brāhman. It has a fine ancient temple of Śūrya, of the 12th century—a gem of the Chaulukya style, either the Karṇesvara or Karnanaru Prasāda of Gñjarāt history. In front of the temple is the fine Sītā's Chauri, and a tank, the Rāma Kuṇḍa originally called the Śūrya Kuṇḍa. Part of the remains seems to have been recently carried away. The whole is pre-eminentlly worthy of preservation. (Surveyed.)

- III. 35. Pallej. Near this are said to be some interesting old temples.

- II b. 36. Sarotri or Sarotra, 5 miles from Sarotra station—an old Jaina temple with many short inscriptions—an interesting old white marble Jaina temple. The principal shrine stands within a closed rectangular court, around the four sides of which, and facing inwards were 52 small cell shrines; but the back or south corridor, with part of the eastern, has been demolished and cleared away. A portion also of the sculptured walls of the main shrine has also fallen, or has been removed, from the south-west corner. The temple has been thoroughly, desecrated, and all its images, of which there must have been at least sixty, have been removed.

- III. 37. Roho, 4 miles north-east of Sarotra, situated in the north of the Pālanpur Agency on the river Bānas. Here is an old step-well, with a short Sanskrit inscription, constructed entirely out of white marble, the material having been taken from the ruins of previous old temples. It is now in rather a ruinous condition and in disuse. Not far from it are the ruined remnants of a white marble Jaina temple, and close to this again are the crumbling walls of a very substantially built railway bungalow, in the outer gateway of which are used some old temple columns.

- III. 38. Rantoj, near Paśchāsar. Some Jaina temples.

- III. 39. Vishroda has vestiges of an ancient town similar to those found at Wallā.

- III. 40. Munjpur, 24 miles south-west of Patṭan. The only relic of former times in the town of Munjpur, of any consequence, is the old Jamī Masjid. This, as is the case with most of the very early mosques of Gujarāt, has been constructed chiefly from the material of old Hindu or Jaina temples, and the remnants of the porch on the north of the courtyard seem to point to that particular part having once been portion of an original temple undisturbed. In the mosque are two Persian and one Sanskrit inscription. The latter is on a beam, and belonged to an older temple, but is now almost illegible.

- III. 41. Lotes'vara. Two miles to the east of Munjpur. A curiously built well, in the plan of a Greek cross. In the centre is the circular shaft, the deepest portion, with its own containing wall, while on the north, south, east, and west of this there are branches. Steps descend the three sides of each to the water which communicates with that of the central shaft by openings in the circular wall. It is of recent construction. The place is a noted resort of pilgrims, and once a year a great mela or fair is held here.

III. 42. Sankes'vara, an old seat of the Jains, 6 miles south-west of Munjpur. Here in the middle of the village is the courtyard, surrounded with cell shrines, built in old brick and plaster, of an old Jaina temple of Pārśvanātha, which has itself entirely disappeared. The brick work is much of the same style as that of the old temple at Sarotra the bricks being carefully moulded to suit the different curves and recesses of the mouldings. There is nothing of note about this new temple; it is constructed in the style of the modern Jaina temples.

Though once the seat of the oldest known dynasty of Gujarāt it has absolutely nothing left upon the surface to commemorate those days. Some ancient bricks of larger size than usual are sometimes unearthed. Groups of *pāliya*s and satī stones are found in the village and on the burning ground at some distance from it, but none of these seem to go back further in date than seven hundred years, and those of that age only number five, with much abraded inscriptions. It is recorded that over the spot where Jaya Śekhara's body was burnt, a temple was erected to the memory of Gujar Deva. On the east of the village are some large mounds some twenty or thirty feet high, but these are said to consist entirely of village refuse and manure, and certainly what lies on the surface is such. A mile to the west of the village in a moderate little shrine, are placed a few mutilated images which might have belonged to some temple or temples of the thirteenth century, while in the village is a small mound with a heap of carved stones about it, evidently the site of an old shrine.

I b. 44. Jhinjva'da, south of Panchasur, is an old Hindu fortress with gateways profusely sculptured and a multilateral tank (see Archaeological Reports, vol. II). (Survoyed.)

III. 45. Va'gel, 19 miles south-west of Patthan. The Rās Mālā after describing the temple of Sūrya at Mudherā, the finest extant in Gujarāt, says: "At Waghel is a temple similar in style to those which have been described, but of smaller dimensions. It consists of a single open mandapa one storey in height with pyramidal roof, three porticoes, and an adytum surmounted by a spire." Not a vestige of this temple now remains, and it is almost forgotten by the villagers themselves. Those that do remember it say it was carted away in toto, some 20 or 25 years ago, its material being used in the construction of a taldar at Râdhanpur! The very foundations were dug out and carried away. Near the village is a very large multilateral tank, but it has long ago fallen into disrepair, and most of its stonework has disappeared.

II b.

46. Dilmâl, 10 miles north-west of Mudherâ and 19 miles south by west of Paṭṭan. Judging from the number of small shrines, now more or less ruined, which lie in the vicinity of the village, and extend for some distance from it on the south and south-east, Dilmâl must have been a place of considerably more importance than the present small village can claim for itself. Perched upon little knolls, at some distance apart are five partly ruined shrines, with many other mounds indicating the sites of so many more.

In the village, enclosed within a rectangular walled court, is the principal temple, that of the presiding deity of the village—the goddess Limboji Mātā—of comparatively recent construction. This temple occupies the site of a far older shrine, a portion of whose materials has been rebuilt into the new one. The surrounding minor shrines, which were appendages to this older central temple, still remain in very good preservation, and shew, by their careful finish and abundant detail, that they were constructed during that period when architectural construction had reached its highest point of excellence. The image of Limboji Mātā was originally in an old temple which now stands in ruins on the bank of the tank to the east of the village. The new temple has been built on precisely the same lines as the old one, in larger proportions, the figures around the walls of the latter being literally copied upon the former, but of far inferior workmanship. Like the old shrine the new one faces north, a direction reserved for temples dedicated to Vishnu, goddesses, and minor deities.

A very curious sculpture occurs on the west face of the little shrine in the south-east corner of the courtyard of the temple. In one figure the four deities, Śiva, Vishnu, Brahmā, and Śūrya, are blended. The image has eight arms, three faces, and is seated upon Garuda. The three faces (the fourth not appearing, of course, in a bas-relief) with the two lower arms—in the hand of one being the water-pot and the other lying extended, palm outward—belong to Brahmā; his vehicle, the goose, being represented below. Śiva is represented by the trident and serpent in the upper pair of hands, while the full-blown lotus in each of the next lower hands, the Hessian hoots, and the horse below, denote Śūrya. Garuda, upon which the image rides, is Vishnu's vehicle, and the pair of hands now broken off no doubt held his symbols, the conch shell and chakra or discus. This fourfold representation is rare.

III.

Without the village, on the south, and built into a long platform are 26 pāliyas or memorial stones, commemorating the decease of certain individuals who died between the years Samvat 1513 and 1891 (A.D. 1457—1835). A panel on the upper part of each slab portrays the individual himself, arrayed in all his war-paint, sometimes mounted upon his horse, and sometimes standing beside his wife, while below the dated record is inscribed. These sculptures are exceedingly crude and coarse, the sculpture also being very shallow, thus forming a violent contrast with the infinitely better executed bas-reliefs on the old shrines. They are entirely void of expression, and lack the slightest animation of pose,

- III. 47. Kamboi, 3 miles north-east of Dilmāl, an old temple in the village, still in use.
- III. 48. Itoda, 2 miles south-east of Dilmāl, ruins of small shrines near the village.
- III. 49. Dhenūj, 16 miles south-east of Paṭṭan. Here is the old temple of Vyāghreśvari in most part rebuilt. The older work is of the very best class, and the carving of the veśī or parapet wall of the maṇḍapa is particularly good. In the porch is a well-carved ceiling. Close by are remains of an old tank sluice, and near the town are the ruins of a very old step-well.
- IIb. 50. Kanoda, 3 miles south by west of Dhenūj. Remains of an old temple on the west of the village. The open maṇḍapa remains, while the shrine has been destroyed.
- III. 51. Mota'p, 3 miles south of Dhenūj. A small shrine with sculptured walls.
- III. 52. Ghurād, 3 miles north-east of Dhenūj. A small sculptured temple.
- III. 53. Virta', near Ghurād, old temple of Māhādeva: An inscription on the base of an image at this temple.
- III. 54. Manoj, about 5 miles north of Dhenūj. An old temple of Nārāyaṇa still in use. It has a curiously sculptured ceiling.
- IIb. 55. Sandera, 10 miles east by south from Paṭṭan. Two old temples, one in the Solanki style and the other in the northern style. The first consists of an open maṇḍapa supported upon pillars and the shrine, while the latter, which stands beside it on the south, is merely a square shrine with antechamber surmounted by a spire of the northern or Orissan type. These temples are in disuse.
- III. 56. Ra'vi, two miles east of Sandera. An old hut small temple with a complete śikhara perched upon a high brick foundation near the village. The walls are sculptured.
- IIb. 57. Sunak, 4 or 5 miles west of Unja Railway Station. Two old temples, one in ruins the other of Nilakantha Māhādeva in good preservation and richly decorated. On a pillar in the smaller ruined temple is a Sanskrit inscription dated Samvat 1356 recording the establishment of an image in the temple. A short while ago a set of two copper-plates was dug up here, and they are now in the possession of Mr. Nārāyaṇ Bhārati, of Paṭṭan. They have since been translated by Dr. Hultzsch, and have appeared in the Epigraphia. They record a grant of land by King Kaṇadeva at Sunak, and in giving the boundary of the same it mentions the villages of Laghu Dābhi and Sandera, both of which still retain the same names and are situated a mile and four miles south-west, respectively, of Sunak.
- III. 58. Va'yad, 15 miles north-west of Paṭṭan. An old step-well. An inscription on a pillar.
- IIb. 59. Kasera, 15 miles west by north of Paṭṭan. A small, but very old, triple-shrined temple dedicated to Śiva, Brahmā and Vishnu. It is profusely covered with sculpture, but has been very badly battered and defaced, and that miserably, probably by the Muhammadan iconoclasts, who, in the early days of their ascendancy in India, so frequently overran Gujarāt and destroyed and desecrated its shrines. The temple is now in disuse. The carving and projecting portions of the work have suffered much from time, and vandalism, but the structure itself, except the upper portions of the śikharas, is well preserved, the temple being almost entire. The plan is that of a central mandapa with three shrines, one at each side, as well as the usual one at the back. Its greatest length is about 30 feet.

It is dedicated to Vishnu. The idol which it originally contained of Chaturbhujā was, it is said, carried away by the Emperor Alau'd-din. Tradition ascribes the temple to Gandharvasena. The present structure is evidently of a very old date, say 400 or 500 years. What is supposed to be the symbol of an ass's hoof occurring in the ornamentation of this temple, as in all those which are said to have been built by Gandharvasena, is perhaps connected with the origin of the legend of its age, which also states that he assumed the form of an ass during the day, resuming that of a man during the night. The symbol, however, is really the same as that occurring so frequently on most Buddhist and Hindu works of early date, and which is now known as the "Chaitya window" ornament. On the temple, inscribed upon the different parts of it, are names which are, with little doubt, those of the workmen who finished off these several portions. They are carefully inscribed and are in the old character. One of these names was Ājāda. Curiously enough this same name is found inscribed on an old marble column at Pattan in a tomb on the south of the town, where a short inscription records the setting up of the column by the wife of one Ājāda in Samvat 1256, thus giving us the date of the Kasera temple, if we take it for granted that the two Ājādas are one and the same person, which I consider very probable.

III. 60. Bhilri, 24 miles north-west of Pattan. Here, as well as at the adjoining villages of Mundeta and Kemāna, there was an old white marble temple, but it has been pulled down, and even the foundation has been dug out to get at the stone for conversion into lime.

III. 61. Pālanpur. There is nothing of any interest from an archaeological point of view at Pālanpur itself, save a few short inscriptions of no great age or interest.

III. 62. Wāṇ, 4 miles or so north of this village is another ancient temple in a jungle far from any habitation. It is a Mahādeva temple of the usual kind, which has been restored, all the upper part being comparatively modern and built over the old portion, which is of carved sandstone. It is surrounded by a low wall and its preservation is doubtless due to the fact of its having been restored and its sanctity preserved. There is, however, no custodian or indeed any one living in or near it.

III. 63. Chandraṇatī, about fifteen miles to the north-east of Roho, and not far from the foot of Mount Abu. Colonel Tod, in his Travels in Western India, in speaking of this place, says: "The city, to judge from the fragments of marble and stone strewn over an extensive plain, must have been of considerable size, and its pretensions to great refinement and riches, may be admitted from the beautiful specimens still remaining of its marble edifices, of which twenty of different sizes were discovered when the spot was first visited by His Excellency Sir Charles Colville and his party in January 1824. The one here represented (in his volume) is Brahmanical and adorned with rich sculptured figures and ornaments in high relief, those of the human form being nearly statues and only attached to the building sufficiently for their own support. They are executed with a degree of excellence scarcely equalled in Indian sculpture, and which would not in some instances disgrace more cultivated artists. Of these images there are one hundred and thirty-eight. The smallest are two feet high and placed in niches of the most elegant workmanship. The interior of the temple and centre dome is highly finished; but the roof and exterior of the domes have lost their outer coating of marble. The pillars in the ground of the drawing appear to have been part of a colonnade, which once surrounded the temple: they are of marble, which material is strewn over the adjacent ground in great profusion, and columns, statues, cornices and slabs are tossed in heaps all around."

Save portions of the basement of one temple and a few blocks of the back wall of another, nothing remained in 1890 of these beautiful shrines, discovered in 1824, excepting one solitary column, which, by its loneliness, rather accentuates the desolation around it. A short walk from here discovers one of the chief causes of this, for there, under the railway bridge, upon either side of the stone piers, lie, in heaps in the river bed, upwards of a hundred cart-loads of sculptured fragments and images, the unused portion of the vast amount of marble carried there from those temples. The site of the old city, and its extent, is still indicated in great measure by the mounds of old brick work which formed the foundations of these old temples, and of which there are a great number; and, on the south side, by portions of the city walls which faced the river Sivalan.

VI—MAHI KÂNTHÂ.

1 Idar (1) At the foot of the gad or fort is the cave temple of Khokanâtha Mahadeva partly ruined, supposed to be upwards of 400 years old. It is an oblong apartment 30×20 feet and from 4 to 6 feet high, excavated in the rock and used as a place of worship. (2) In a rising ground south of the town, and close to the wall, is the cave-temple of Dhanesvara Mahadeva, a natural rock cavern 20×10 feet and from 5 to 7 feet high. (3) In a rising ground $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile south-west of Idar is the cave of Mankalâvara Mahadeva. It measures 20×12 feet and the height varies from 5 to 10 feet. (4) On the summit of the gad to the north-east of the town the Ruthi Rani-nu maham built of brick plastered with chunam. It is said to be upwards of 600 years old. It has a domed roof, in the Muhammadan style, with a courtyard in front, and measures 25×19 feet and 12 feet high. It is visited by pilgrims and travellers. The wife of a former chief of Idar having some disagreement with her lord was ordered to live on the hill, where this palace is said to have been built for her and is thus called after her name. (5) In the gad to the north of the town the Radmah Chokri appears to be an unfinished Juna temple, built of white sandstone. It measures 375×34 feet and 16 feet high, in the Jaina style. (6) On the gad is the cave (a natural cavern) of Vajar Matâ with a wall and terraces in front. It is 22×18 feet and 7 feet high and contains an image of Vajar Matâ worshipped by all castes. It has a ruined dhamasâlâ attached to it built of brick and plastered with chunam. (7) In the gad, the temple of Sântinâtha of white sandstone, sculptured, and brick plastered, is upwards of 400 years old and entire, measuring 100×125 and 55 feet high.

2 Limbhor the temple of Kalanâtha Mahadeva with a dhamasâlâ partly in ruins, is built of white sandstone and brick plastered. It measures 37×15 feet and 30 feet high.

3 Ahmâdnagar The Bhadr palace in ruins, upwards of 100 years old, built of white sandstone. The space within the surrounding fortified walls measures 700 by 500 feet. The palace is said to have been originally constructed in the reign of Ahmad Shâh, the founder of the town. It is also called Mohunâ rim ni mahâli. (2) A lunda or reservoir 100×50 feet. The reservoir is said to have been constructed during the reign of Ahmad Shâh as a bathing place for Mohunâ rim, who it is said used to visit it daily by an underground passage from the Bhadr palace.

4 Khed Brahma the temple of Bramhâ surrounded by a wall measuring 57×30 feet and 36 feet high is built of white sandstone and brick plastered. It has been recently put in repair by the Brahmin community of the town and has an image of Bramhâ which is worshipped. The temple is known by the name of "Bhaghu Rishi." The river Harnav, on which the village stands is considered sacred. A fair is held every year on Mâgha S d 11th.

Desan The temple of Bhavanâtha Mahâdeva, upwards of 100 years old, measures 50×25 feet and 16 feet high is built of white sandstone and brick partly in ruins. It has a dhamasâlâ attached to it. This temple is known by the name of Chumari (Chavarrâ) Rishi, a great sage. A fair is held here annually in the month of Sâvan.

* The little one of white stone is the return of the same name as the other.

- III. 6 Bhilora. The temple of Śrī Chandraprabhuṣi, of white sandstone sculptured and plastered. It measures 70 × 45 feet and 30 feet high. It has a tower four storeys or 75 feet high, and a dharmaśālā within the entrance gate. It has been recently put in repair by a Jaina merchant.
- III. 7. Posina Sabli. The temples of Pārśvanātha and Neminātha measuring 150 × 140 feet and 26 feet high are built of white sandstone plastered with chunam.
- III. 8. Sa'mlaji. The temple of Sāmlaji is built of white sandstone and brick and is surrounded by a wall with a gateway. It is of two storeys supported on pillars and a canopy with arches on each side. It is supposed to be upwards of 400 years old. It contains an image of Vishnu. Some old inscriptions. A city is said to have existed at this place in the time of Rājā Harichandrajī, signs of which still remain. A number of images of Brahmā, Vishnu and Śiva are found in several places which are now in ruins. A large fair is held here every year for fifteen days on Kārtika Sud. 13th.
- III. 9. Timba, in the Gadwārā zillā. The Tārangā temples on the top of a hill surrounded by other peaks. They are seven storeys high and are temples of Ajitaoāthaji and Sambhunāthaji built of white sandstone and brick. These temples are said to have been built in the reign of Kumārpalā of Pattan 700 years ago (vide Forbes' Rās Mālā).
- III. 10. Sada'sna. There is a cave temple of Mokheśvara Mahādeva about 4½ miles north-west of Suda'sna on the bank of the river Sarasvatī with a monastery close by, built of sandstone and brick, now in ruins. This temple is held sacred by all castes from being on the river Sarasvatī (Kumārīkā) the waters of which are offered to the idol and to a pippala tree. A fair is held every year, Bhādrapada Sud. 11th.
- III. 11. A'ra'sur, 15 miles north-east of Dāntā. The temple of Ambā Bhavāni, measuring 25 × 20 feet and 19 feet high is built of marble of inferior quality by Nāgar Brāhmaṇas. It has a dharmaśālā. The floor is paved with marble.
- Inscriptions:—(1) on the edge of a reservoir near the principal shrine called the Manasarovar, of Mahārānā Sī Māladeva, dated A.D. 1309. (2) Also at the door of the adytum of the temple of Ambāji is a tablet which records offerings made in A.D. 1545 by the Rānī of Rāv Barmāl of Idar. (3) There are several other inscriptions on the pillars of the temple, principally of the 16th century, recording gifts of private individuals and one, dated A.D. 1723, when the "lord of the land Rājādhirāja Rānāji (one hundred and eight times repeated) Śrī Prati Singhji was ruling"; states that a Vānia family built a dharmaśālā for the sake of a son, and adds "by the kindness of Ambā, the hope was fulfilled" (vide Forbes' Rās Mālā). It is visited four times a year by large saṅghas in the months of Kārtika, Mārgaśīrṣa, Śrāvaṇa and Bhādrapada. The revenue of the temple is considerable (Forbes' Rās Mālā, Chapter IX. vol. I.).
- III. 12. Four miles north-east of Ambā Bhavāni, the temple of Koteśvara Mahādeva, measuring 20 × 15 feet and 25 feet high. There is a dharmaśālā attached to it, partly ruined. The pilgrims who visit the Ambā Bhavāni shrine visit this also, as without doing so their pilgrimage would not be considered complete. The sacred river Sarasvatī takes its rise from near this temple, and the pilgrims consider that by bathing at this spot in its water they are cleansed from all their sins.

Inscription:—On the jamb and threshold are two, of Samrat 1156 and 1159.

- III. 13. Kumbharia. The temples of Neminātha built of white marble were, according to tradition, 360 in number but were afterwards reduced to 5 by volcanic disturbance. They are much visited by pilgrims.

Inscriptions:—In the temple of Nominātha there is an inscription dated A.D. 1249, recording additions to the edifice made by Bramhadēva, the son of Chahud, the minister of Kumārāpāla Solanki. On one of a group of pāliḡds close by is an inscription dated A.D. 1200, which states that “Sī Dharavarshādova, the lord of Aihuda, the throne of all Māndalikas on whom the sun shines, constructed a well in this city of Araṣanpur” (Forbes’ Rās Mālā). There are also other inscription both in the temples and on the stones of this group.

These Jaina temples were constructed, it is said, by Vimalasāh to the number of 360. They were dedicated to Pārsvanātha. It is said that Ambā Mātāji gave great wealth to Vimalasāh and asked him by whose aid he had built these temples; he replied, by the aid of his spiritual preceptor. The Mātāji repeated the question thrice and each time received the same answer. She then said to him, escape as soon as you can. He fled into the crypt below one of the temples and emerged on Mount Abu. Then the Mātāji consumed all the temples by fire with the exception of five (vide Forbes’ Rās Mālā).

- III. 14. Haldervas on the bank of the Vātrāk, half a mile south-east of the village in the Ghorasīr tālūā, is the temple of Mahādeva named Bhṛigu Rishi, measuring 20 × 14 feet. On the other side of the river opposite the preceding is a temple of Parāśara (?) Mahādeva 36 feet by 18; repaired about 70 years ago.

- III. 15. Bannoli Kōṭ, a ruined fort about half-way between the villages of Haldervas and Barmuara on the right bank of the Vātrāk river. It is said to have been built by Muhammad Bignāl.

- III. 16. Jētpur, 3 miles from Gabat. The Khānerā Tālāw, a large tank with masonry band on the north side. This fine tank and band are said to have been made by the orders of Siddhārāja Jayasīnha.

- III. 17. Prantvel, about 4 miles from Gabat. $\frac{2}{3}$ of a mile east of the village is a raised platform on which there are three stones like pāliḡds, a large one in the centre and a smaller one on either side. Round the platform there are thirty or forty graves. The people of the neighbourhood say that these stones were erected and are now worshipped by a wandering tribe called “Channthas.”

- III. 18. Mngori. Three pāliḡds, on one of which is carved a man and a horse. There is an inscription on one of the pāliḡds which is illegible. Another pāliḡd is called Hathia. A black stone on which are carved 3 snakes is called by the natives “Gek Chuhān.”

- III. 19. Panadra. An old fort of the time of Muhammad Bignāl.

- III. 20. Telnal on the Vātrāk. The very old temple of Kollreśvara about a mile from the village. It has been recently repaired.

- III. 21. Ramas. A step-well, said to have been built by the wife of the Nawāb of Kapadwanj, 500 years ago.

- III. 22. Sathamba. A step-well and a pāliḡd with an inscription which runs as follows:—
 सुवर्त. ११२१ वर्षे गजरा गुदि १५ दलितार दिने सोत वसिनी धीवगाराजमि सामनन सताविह राजश्रीदे.
 तपतवेतददरिपोरमममिधमि.

- III. 23. Amlyala. The temple of Nihkantha Mahādeva, an old Musalman tomb and the ruins of old Amlyala.

VII.—KATHIAWAD.

I.—JHĀLĀWĀD PRĀNT.

I. Thān. (1) Opposite the town on the west side of the tank, on the east, is the temple of Vāsukinātha, supposed to have been built about 430 years ago. It measures 17 feet by 10 and is supported by 4 pillars. All classes of Hindus reverence Vāsukinātha as a god. It belongs to a Mahant, Atit Revāgarji, who is the head of a monastery at Thān. Two villages and some morā landed property yielding an annual revenue of about 1,000 rupees are granted for defraying the necessary expenses appertaining to this temple. Close to the temple there is a well (rāt) having two entrances, built about the same time. The whole town with its adjoining lands, and particularly this rāt, abound in serpents. In this town people have a firm belief in the sanctity of the "Vāsuki." They consider him as their deity, and would never run the risk of saying anything against him. This temple is said to have existed long prior to the time when the town was built. The local legend is as follows: Once Abherāj, the chief of Lakhitar, was wandering in search of bullocks in the jungle which is said to have then existed all about the site of Thān. He saw from a distance smoke arising from the place where the temple at present stands. The chief came up and saw the Mahant Sūkhdevagarji, who welcomed him greeting him by his name Abherāj, although they had never seen each other before. The Thākor, astonished at this, bowed to the Mahant, who ordered him to re-populate the place, some old remains of an ancient village being visible there. The Thākor asked for some boon or blessing, which the Mahant refused, but said that the serpent-deity would grant it. He encouraged the chief to hold his hand before the serpent, which he did. The cobra raised his hood to grant the asked-for boon, but the Thākor losing his courage withdrew his hand so that the hood fell on the tip of one of his fingers. The Mahant Sūkhdevagarji then told him that every third ruler on the gādi of Lakhitar should be a minor or child.

Before the temple was built there was only a "Rāfadā," or mound of earth in which the serpents hide themselves, which is still preserved in the temple. The present Mahant Revāgarji daily pours down a hole in the "Rāfadā" a ser of cow's milk. It is said that if the person who pours the milk be unclean, or if the milk be that of a cow not more than ten days after calving, it is thrown out by the serpent.

On some *sati pāliya*s near the temple may be read the dates Samvat 1720, 1772, 1792, &c.

Thān is situated in the district of "Pāñchāla," belonging to the father of Draupadi, the common wife of the Pāṇḍavas.

(2) Satī is a rāt or well, hewn in the rock, at a little distance from the town to the north of the eastern gate. It is 33 by 17 feet. The descending flights of steps are also cut out of the same stone. People believe that if a woman who has too little milk in her breasts for her child goes to this rāt, she puts its steps with her body, immerses it in the water, and puts it on dr'pping, her breasts will burst out in thin streams of milk as soon as she returns home. People from distant places resort to this rāt for the attainment of this object. About the rāt there are one or two *pāliya*s, one of Samvat 1774.

III. (3) Hinglāj cave is situated near this Sativāv in the east. It is also hewn out of the rock and measures 18 by 15 by 7 feet. The entrance is sufficient for a man to enter in. There appear to have been two pillars to support the roof of the cave, and there are ten raised seats supposed to be those of ancient saints for sitting in meditation. In the cave there are five images, one that of Hinglāj and the other four of other goddesses.

III. (4) Bhidabhanjan cave is to the south at a little distance from Thān. It is cut in the rock and is 17 by 14 by 7 feet. It has also ten hewn seats outside the cave on the right. There is no image inside, but there are two seats on the south and east walls and a raised bench along the west side.

III. (5) Muni Bāṭā's devāl is two or three miles to the south of Thān on a bully ridge forming the western bank of a large tank and close to the Mahānadi, and may have been built when the band was thrown across the river, perhaps in the 14th century. It is dedicated to Śiva and is partly ruined. It is built of red and white stone, richly sculptured inside in a spirited style resembling those on the Pāvāgād hill in Gujaraṭ. It has three domes supported by 16 pillars. It measures 36 by 25 feet. There is one broken ling about 2 feet high, together with some broken images of goddesses. They are said to have been broken by the Muhammadans.

According to a local tradition some horses belonging to Maghābhāi of Junāgād were taken away by the renowned thieves Khāprā and Kōḍiyā, who lived about this place. The return journey of over 100 miles with the stolen animals was accomplished in so short a time as passed between the setting of the sun and the rising of the moon in the same night, so that neither the sun nor the moon might be witnesses of their guilt. Maghābhāi asked Khāprā and Kōḍiyā for the horses, but they would not admit having taken them. Maghābhāi thereupon uttered a curse, "Should you have made off with the horses, this pond shall burst." The curse is said to have been realized by the instant bursting of the pond and giving rise to the river Mahānadi.

III. (6) Sūrya temple is a mile north of Thān on a hill which was originally the old fort of Kandolī, and close to Songad, the fort on the adjacent hill. It is said to have been originally built 1,000 years ago, but it was entirely destroyed by Kartalab Khān of Ahma: dābād in 1692. The temple is said to have been erected by Lākṣā Fulāni. The present temple is built of old materials, and plain. It is 80 by 28 feet and supported by 38 pillars, of which 8 are new. It contains two images of Sūrya and of his wife, here called Rāṇade. This temple is enclosed in a compound having stone walls and other smaller temples. There is one inscription of Samvat 1432 (A.D. 1376), which is read thus:—

संवत् १४३२ वर्षे वैशाखसुदि ९ सोमवारे । श्रीमान् पुत्र सीध कान्तार. तनुका उपर
तो देवकादी जगदिपाल नाणा कान्दीये संकर उदय नंदी मान महाराज.

flights of steps on both sides. The space containing water is 200 by 32 feet. The temple along with the reservoir is enclosed by a compound wall out of repair. A large fair is annually held here on the 5th and 6th of Bhādarvā Suddh, when 30 000 or 40 000 persons collect from the surrounding districts. Outside the compound in the east are some pāliyās carved in high relief. The figures on them have their hands joined as if in prayer. On one the date Samvat 1282 can be read with difficulty.

- III 2 Sitha, 10 miles north west of Wadhvān under Dbrāngadhīā on the east about a mile from the village is the fine tank of Chandrasar built by Chandrasingu, a late chief of Holwad, Samvat 1665. It is multilateral in form, built of stone on all sides and measuring about 500 feet by 400. The style is quite plain. Samvat 1524 with the following śloka is found in an inscription on one of the stones—

चंद्राहार तटाय च कारित दर्भगेत्रिणा ।

द्वयाणां शान्तये पूज्य चंद्राधनक्षत्रिणा ॥

There is a small temple on the bank of this pond. The words शान्तये पूज्य were inscribed on the upper part of the door frame. This led people to conjecture that some treasure was buried underneath, and hence the ruined state of the temple.

- III 3 Sacla, about 15 miles south west from Wadhvān has an artificial lake about 700 yards long and 300 broad. It is very old and said to have been built by Siddharāja Jayasinh. The yearly collection of silt has considerably reduced its depth, yet if properly filled with water it suffices for the people of the place for the whole year.

- III 4 Wadhvan (1) The temple of Rānik Devī is a simple chattrī at a little distance from the northern wall of the town. It is said to have been built by Siddharāja Jayasinha about 700 years ago to the memory of ośatis and is about 20 feet high and 44 feet in circumference. It is sculptured. (See Forbes Rās Mālā).

- III (2) The Mādhrava edō in the town of Wadhvān near the western gate called Lakha Pol, is 188 feet 9 inches by 22 feet 2 inches and 80 feet deep. The style is bold and ornate. It has six arches, the lowest of which has six storeys above it. There is a flight of fourteen steps between each two arches. At the top near the Kotla there is a stone mortar or pot seven feet deep. An underground pipe goes to a well in the Darhāgrad so that water was easily taken through the pipe during the Holy holidays. It is styled Mādhrava edō after Mādhrava a Nagar by caste and Kārāhī to Kārān Ghelā, the last king of Gujarāt, and who is said to have brought the Mussalmāns to Pattan in revenge for the seduction of his wife. In the side walls are mutilated images, one of Hanumān and the other of Bhairava, which are said to have been broken by Alaud din Khum.

There is an inscription of Samvat 1350 (A.D. 1296) in a niche under the arch which reads on one side—

संवत् १३५० वर्षे कार्तिक वदी ८ शुक्र नागरराज्येय य श्रीसामसुन्दरी देव शीतपु

and on the other—

नागरराज्येय महेश्वर आमादश्वमेधेश्वर श्रीनामादीति

- III (3) Gangā Vāv near the eastern gate which is called the Shani Pol. It is of six storeys and measures 150 by 70 feet and 62 feet deep. There are five arches in it having storeys above them. In the third arch is an inscription in which the date "Samvat 1223" Til āgura Suddhīrd is legible.

III. (3) Hinglāj cave is situated near this Sativāv in the east. It is also hewn out of the rock and measures 18 by 15 by 7 feet. The entrance is sufficient for a man to enter in. There appear to have been two pillars to support the roof of the cave, and there are ten raised seats supposed to be those of ancient saints for sitting in meditation. In the cave there are five images, one that of Hinglāj and the other four of other goddesses.

III. (4) Bhidabhanjan cave is to the south at a little distance from Thān. It is cut in the rock and is 17 by 14 by 7 feet. It has also ten hewn seats outside the cave on the right. There is no image inside, but there are two seats on the south and east walls and a raised bench along the west side.

II b. (5) Muni Bāva's devāl is two or three miles to the south of Thān on a hilly ridge forming the western bank of a large tank and close to the Mahānadi, and may have been built when the band was thrown across the river, perhaps in the 14th century. It is dedicated to Śiva and is partly ruined. It is built of red and white stone, richly sculptured inside in a spirited style resembling those on the Pāvāgaḍ hill in Gujarāt. It has three domes supported by 16 pillars. It measures 36 by 25 feet. There is one broken linga about 2 feet high, together with some broken images of goddesses. They are said to have been broken by the Muhammadans.

According to a local tradition some horses belonging to Maghābhāi of Juvāgaḍ were takoo away by the renowned thieves Khāprā and Kōḍiyā, who lived about this place. The return journey of over 100 miles with the stolen animals was accomplished in so short a time as passed between the setting of the sun and the rising of the moon in the same night, so that neither the sun nor the moon might be witnesses of their guilt. Maghābhāi asked Khāprā and Kōḍiyā for the horses, but they would not admit having taken them. Maghābhāi thereupon uttered a curse, "Should you have made off with the horses, this pond shall burst." The curse is said to have been realized by the instant bursting of the pond and giving rise to the river Mahānadi.

III. (6) Sūrya temple is a mile north of Thān on a hill which was originally the old fort of Kandolā, and close to Songaḍ, the fort on the adjacent hill. It is said to have been originally built 1,000 years ago, but it was entirely destroyed by Kartalab Khān of Ahmadābād in 1692. The temple is said to have been erected by Lākṣhā Pālāni. The present temple is built of old materials, and plain. It is 60 by 28 feet and supported by 38 pillars, of which 8 are new. It contains two images of Sūrya and of his wife, here called Rāṇāde. This temple is enclosed in a compound having stone walls and other smaller temples. There is one inscription of Samat 1432 (A.D. 1376), which is read thus:—

संवत् १४३२ वर्ष वैशाखसुदे ९ सो वृट्ठल । पीठा पुत्र सीध कासर, जयुका उपर
सो देवकादी दामरि पाय नाया कादीको सरर उदक नदी मान माहारज.

II b. (7) The temple of Mahādeva at Trineta, commonly called "Tarnetar," is 6 miles to the north of Thān in Derā Pānehāla. This temple is said to have been built by the king Māndhātā in the Satyayuga. The interior and exterior of the temple are highly sculptured all over with various forms and figures, but is weather-worn. It measured inside 40 by 30 feet. It probably dates from the 11th or 12th century. The original linga having been broken, it has been replaced by two others one after the other. There is a pool or reservoir of water in front forming three sides of an oblong, and having two descending flights of steps on both sides. The space containing water is 200 by 32 feet. The temple along with the reservoir is enclosed by a compound wall out of repair. A large fair is annually held here on the 5th and 6th of Bhādarvā Sudh, when 30,000 or 40,000 persons collect from the surrounding districts. Outside the compound in the east are some pāliya carved in high relief. The figures on them have their hands joined as if in prayer. On one the date Samvat 1282 can be read with difficulty.

- III. 2. Sitha, 10 miles north-west of Wadhwan under Dhrāngadhra: on the east about a mile from the village is the fine tank of Chandrasar built by Chandrasingji, a late chief of Halwad, Samvat 1665. It is multilateral in form, built of stone on all sides and measuring about 500 feet by 400. The style is quite plain. Samvat 1524 with the following śloka is found in an inscription on one of the stones:—

चंद्रादरं तदगं च कारितं दर्भगोत्रिणा ।

वृत्तानां राज्ञेय्युन चंद्राधनक्षत्रिणा ॥

There is a small temple on the bank of this pond. The words गन्धन आशुद were inscribed on the upper part of the door frame. This led people to conjecture that some treasure was buried underneath, and hence the ruined state of the temple.

- III. 3. Sa'ela, about 15 miles south-west from Wadhwan: has an artificial lake about 700 yards long and 300 broad. It is very old and said to have been built by Siddharaja Jayasinh. The yearly collection of silt has considerably reduced its depth, yet if properly filled with water it suffices for the people of the place for the whole year.

- III. 4. Wadhwan. (1) The temple of Rānik Devī is a simple chhatra at a little distance from the northern wall of the town. It is said to have been built by Siddharaja Jayasinh about 750 years ago to the memory of a sati and is about 20 feet high and 44 feet in circumference. It is sculptured. (See Forbes' Rās Mālā)

- III. (2) The Mādhava ēdo in the town of Wadhwan near the western gate, called Lakha Pol, is 188 feet 9 inches by 22 feet 2 inches and 80 feet deep. The style is bold and ornate. It has six arches, the lowest of which has six storeys above it. There is a flight of fourteen steps between each two arches. At the top near the Kotha there is a stone mortar or pot seven feet deep. An underground pipe goes to a well in the Darbāgad, so that water was easily taken through the pipe during the Holi holidays. It is styled Mādhava ēdo after Mādhava, a Nāgar by caste and Kārbhārī to Kāran Ghelā, the last king of Gujārāt, and who is said to have brought the Muslims to Pattan in revenge for the seduction of his wife. In the side walls are mutilated images, one of Hanuman and the other of Bhairava, which are said to have been broken by Alau'd-din Khuni.

There is an inscription of Samvat 1350 (A.D. 1296) in a niche under the arch, which reads on one side—

संवत् १३५० वर्षे कार्तिक वदी ८ गुरु नागररातीय य श्रीसामुद्रमोदय श्रीसीधु
and on the other—

नागररातीय गह्वे श्रीसादल्लुनामह श्रीतशमादीती.

- III. (3) Gangā Vāv, near the eastern gate, which is called the Siani Pol. It is of six storeys and measures 160 by 70 feet and 62 feet deep. There are five arches in it having storeys above them. In the third arch is an inscription in which the date "Samvat 1225 Phūlguṇa Sudh. 3rd" is legible.

III. (4) Mahāvīra Svāmī's temple on the bank of the river in the north-east of the town, dates probably from about the 11th century, and is built in the ordinary Jaina style.

III (5) Half a mile from the south gate called the Kharva Pol is a vdv near the garden belonging to Dājirāj. It measures 99 by 14 feet. It has three arches; the storeys above two of these arches have been ruined. There is an inscription some part of which, though almost illegible, can with difficulty be thus deciphered:—

संवत् १३०१ पोष शुद्ध १ चंद श्रीवर्धमानमंडले महाराज श्रीसेतुपत्ति श्रीशिखराजदेव.

III. 5. Between Wadhvān and Khamisānā, about a kos to the north-west of the latter, is the cave of Khamisānā called Dholidhaj—a natural cavity about 18 inches square. All about here there was a thick grove, which was washed away by the heavy inundation of Bhogavā in Sahval 1922. It is a very old place, but no inscription is known to exist. Lately some rooms have been built near this cave by the Wadhvān Darhār for ascetics to live in. The local legend is as follows: There were two white rainchalis (heavenly she-goats) which used to pour their milk on an ascetic who lived there. These rainchalis were seen by a shepherd, who disclosed the mystery to the public, and hence the name of the cave is Dholidhaj. Formerly the grove about was said to be the resort of lions and tigers, but now it having been washed away by the river it is not difficult of access. It is said that the cave has two subterranean passages, one leading to Abū and the other to Gīrnār.

III. 6. Halwad, about 20 miles west of Dhīrāngadhārā, dates from about A.D. 1416; it was the capital of the Jhalīs after Kūhā and before Dhīrāngadhārā. There is a fine palace about 250 feet square, erected in 1709 A.D. by Rānā Śrī Jasvantsinghji, and bears an inscription to that effect. There are said to be some fine carved wood screens in the interior. A large number of śati pātiyās near the town date from A.D. 1633.

III. 7. Dives'vara, about 3 miles north from Chotilā, has a small temple of Mahādeva.

I b. 8. Kodināra; a stone tablet with a Praśasti inscription giving the name of Anandapura.

II b. 9. Anandapura, 6½ miles north-west of Wala, has a fine temple attributed to Siddharāja. Ind. Ant., VII, p. 7.

II.—JUNAGAD STATE.

III. 1. Junagad (1) About a mile to the east is the Dāmodarā Kuṇḍa; a very small spring that flows through it keeps it constantly full of water. As it is considered a place of great sanctity, the dead from the town are brought there to be burned, and pilgrims from different parts go to bathe in its holy water. It is 237 feet long and 54 feet broad. Ghāts are constructed on its south and north sides. Near the north ghāt are small temples built where influential Nāgars were burnt. In connection with the south ghāt is the temple of Dāmodarāji looking on the tank. It is ascended by a flight of 25 steps. The temple, though very old, is entire. It is said that it was built by Vajranābha; fourth in descent from Kṛṣṇa. The wall around the temple was built by the late Divān Amarji. The courtyard, which is 109 feet by 125, contains, besides the temple proper, a dharma-śālā and a temple, smaller in size, dedicated to Baladevāji, brother of Kṛṣṇa. The temple proper consists of the vestibule and the idol chamber. A dome covers the vestibule and a śikhara is over the shrine decorated with niches and mythological carvings on its walls. The courtyard was also paved by the Divān Amarji.

(2) Revatikunda. The courtyard of the temple of Damodaraji communicates with the Revatikunda which is 60 feet long and broad. It has two inscriptions. The kunda has niches filled with images. Its water is considered holy and pilgrims are required to bathe in this kunda prior to their bathing in the Dāmodarikunda.

(3) The temple of Muchakunda is very small and has a cell, which can only be entered from the shaft of a well.

(4) Near the monastery of Pyāra Bāvi are nine caves cut in the rock. These caves, once inhabited by Pyāra Bāvi and his disciples, are now overgrown with grass and very filthy. Besides these there are seven caves cut in the south side of the rock (See Archaeological Report, Vol II).

(5) The Uparkot contains a large cave, the Jamī Masjid, Adichadi rāv and Noghan well. The upper storey of the cave is 37 feet long and 31½ feet broad, and has six pillars on the capitals of which figures are carved, which are corroded. This storey leads to a small bath. The lower storey is 41 feet long and broad. Figures are carved on the capitals and three walls are also decorated with a belt of carving. A hole in the roof admits sufficient light. The whole depth of the cave is 29 feet. (See Archaeological Report, Vol II, and Views of Somnatha, Garnar, &c)

(6) The Jamī Masjid is 137½ feet long, 96 feet broad, and 19 feet high. Its roof is supported by 140 pillars. On the east is a hoy or bath, now disused. (See Archaeological Report, Vol II).

(7) The Adichadi rāv and Noghan well. The former is cut through a thick stratum of stone, but the steps are entirely destroyed for the greater part of the descent. The water, though drinkable is not used. The latter well, though sunk very deep, does not contain water and is entered by a flight of steps.

III. (8) The roof of the old gate Uparkot is supported by four arches carved after the Hindu fashion.

III. (9) Tombs of the Nawābs of Junāgadh. The platform on which the māqarabā of Ahmadrkhānji stands is $21\frac{1}{2}$ (2) feet long and broad. The whole building is decorated with Muhammadan sculpture, and the doors of the room containing the grave, with brass work. There are five domes with spires and small minarets not higher than the spires.

The māqarabās of Bahādōrkhānji and Lādadi Bibi are of the same description but differ in the kind of sculpture. The platform of the former is $32\frac{1}{2}$ feet and that of the latter is $26\frac{1}{2}$ feet long and broad. The doors of the latter are ornamented with ivory work. The average height of these māqarabās is 43 feet. Besides these, there are nine māqarabās different in size but not larger than those described.

III. (10) Tank of Bhavanātha or Mrigikunda. This tank is $23\frac{1}{2}$ feet by $31\frac{1}{2}$. It is shallow and in a dilapidated state. Beside it is the old temple of Bhavanātha which is $56\frac{1}{2}$ feet long, 26 feet broad, and $21\frac{1}{2}$ feet high. It is built of stone and has nine small domes undecorated with sculptures. There is an inscription carved on the threshold of the shrine, which is illegible.

(11) Bordevl. There is a small temple at the foot of the Girnar Hill dedicated to this goddess. In this valley was discovered and opened, in January and February 1889, the Boria or Lakha Medi stūpa by Mr. J. M. Campbell, I. C. S., which yielded relics. For an account of it see the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. LX. Part I. No. 2, 1891.

III (12) Khengārāv. About 6 miles west of Junāgadh is the Kengārāv, which is $18\frac{1}{2}$ feet by 128. There are two storeys over the lower part of the steps. The upper storey is supported by nine round pillars and leads to the balconies looking over the water. The lower storey is also supported by the same number of pillars, which are decorated with images carved on them. This stūpa is in a ruined condition.

I b. (13) Nearly half-way from Junāgadh to the tank of Dāmodaraji, is the famous rock bearing three inscriptions of Aśoka, Skandagupta, and Jindradaman.*

III (14) Caves of Nava Durgā. No caves are dedicated to these Mātās, but their images are carved in the side of a rock. The images are plastered with red stuff.

III (15) Māi Ghadrhechi. Within the confines of the sthāna of Māi Ghadrhechi in the northern part of Junāgadh is the small cave of Dātār containing his tomb. Near this is a mazid 39 feet long and broad. From the sculpture on the door frame and the form of the pillars, which are thirty in number, it seems to have been formerly a Hindu temple dedicated to Mahideva. There is an Arabic inscription carved on the lintel. The sthāna of Māi Ghadrhechi is a large cave 54 feet long, $46\frac{1}{2}$ broad, and $21\frac{1}{2}$ high. Within the cave is a small temple dedicated to Māi Ghadrhechi. It has a small rough dome undecorated with sculpture. South of this temple is an oblong hall, the roof of which is supported by six pillars. The entrance of the cave is supported by four pillars.

* For identification by K. L. N. Bahadur Ardhur Jamsetji, late Nub Ditta of Junāgadh, of the site of the Guharāda lake and dam, mentioned in the Aśoka rock inscription, see the paper read at the meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society on 19th January 1891.

II b. (16) Near the śikhā of Māi Ghadhechi are the five caves of Khāprā Kodā, all communicating with one another and containing 59 pillars, in the capitals of which were carved the forms of animals, particularly of lions, parts of which are still visible. The caves are not looked after. There is a Persian inscription on a wall of the third cave (see Archæological Report, Vol. II).

II b. (17) Gīrnār hill near Junāgaḍ, the ancient Ujjayanta. At an elevation of about 2,700 feet is a large and fine group of Jaina temples, with numerous inscriptions, which will be found collected in the Appendix, with rough translations. On the summit of the hill is a temple of Amhā Mātā, the foundation of which at least is probably of very early date. For an account of the Jaina temples on Gīrnār, see Archæological Survey Reports, Vol. II.

2. Vanthali. (1) The Sūrajkuṇḍa is very old and considered a holy tank, in which the inhabitants of the surrounding villages bathe on holidays. It is 32 feet long and broad.

(2) The Jami Masjid stands in the west of Vanthali. It was a Hindu building and is still known as a court of Balirāja. It was converted into a masjid, and is 148 feet long and 52½ feet wide. The courtyard contains some tombs and a small māgarbā. In the interior is a long hall 33½ feet by 73½, the roof of which is supported with 72 pillars. It has 7 domes decorated with sculpture. The images carved in the capitals of the pillars and in the concave part of the largest dome were knocked off by the Musalmāns. There is a small dark room in the southern part containing six pillars, one of which bears the following inscription:—

संवत् १४०८ वर्षे माघ शुद्धी ११ रवौ सु० चाहड सुता सु० मलमडा राजश्री संसिलनी
भार्या दिवंगतोऽस्ति शुभमंयात् ॥

An inscription in the Hācirāv near Dhandhūsar reads:—

III. 3. Chorwad. Two miles south is the small temple of Bhavānt.

III. 4. Ma'ngrol. The Jami Masjid stands in the western part of the town. According to the inscription it was metamorphosed into a masjid by Samashkhan, Vazir to Firuzshah, in 1364. It is said that Bhan Jethwa, wishing to re-marry his divorced wife, referred to the Brāhmans, who told him that he could only do so by marrying 1600 girls in one house at one time as atonement for the sin, and hence the origia of the building.
 It was built by him in Samvat 1208 (A.D. 1252). The Musalmāns have broken off the sculptures and images in the inner part of the dome and those carved in the capitals of the pillars. This mosque is 278 feet long and 256 broad, has 9 domes, and its roof is supported by 818 pillars. Rāvali Masjid, according to an inscription in the interior, was metamorphosed in 1401 into a masjid by Jāfarkhan in the time of Muhammad Taghlakh.
 The sculpture is pure Hindu. The images carved in the concave side of the domes bear testimony to its formerly being a Hindu temple. These images are defaced or knocked off from the niches. This mosque is 109 feet long and 90 feet broad and its roof is supported by 155 pillars. It has three domes without spires.

- III. 5. Delwāda'. The Jami Masjid stands near the western gate. It is 77 feet long and 60 feet broad and has two minarets 66 feet high. It is built of stone and its roof is supported by 26 pillars. Copy of an inscription on a grave is as follows:—

در جامع مسجد قمبر ولواره که از بنا و یادشاهان سابق از
 احمدآباد است در آن تربیتی اولیاء الله است که نامش شاه مشهور

- III. 6. Gupta Praya'ga is composed of three Luggas or tanks connected with one another. Their names are Prayāganokundā, Sarasvatīnokundā and Jamunājūnokundā. Their average length and breadth is 150 feet. The water of the 3 tanks accumulates in the Prayāganokundā whence it flows into the sea. Besides these, there are three kundis more, viz. Brahmagayā, Rudragayā, and Vishnugayā to the north. The dead from Delwāda and Unā are brought there to be burned, it being considered a place of great sanctity.

III. 7. Vejalkotho is the namō given to a small hill about 15 miles, north-east of U. It is now a barren hill, but was formerly the abode of Vejal Vājo, chief of a tribe who conquered Unā from Chandrahal Ojra.

III. 8. Unā. The Jami Masjid is said to have been a temple of Siva and Mātā Chandrahal reigned at Unā. The building is purely Hindu. It was built of stone and its roof is supported by 80 pillars.

The masjid of Hazratshāh stands at a little distance north of Unā. It is 300 feet long and 120 feet broad.

III. 9. Tulsi Syām, about 20 miles north of Unā. On entering the place there is a hall on the right where pilgrims, particularly mendicants, receive the stamp (or brand) of the śankha and chakra on their hands. The courtyard contains two small temples of Hanumān and Śiva. The vestibule is entered from the east and contains stone benches attached to the walls, and its dome is supported by 12 pillars. The chamber between the vestibule and the shrine has three store-rooms and 12 pillars that support its dome. Next to this is the chamber containing the idol of Śyāmji, 2½ feet high, placed on a small platform 4 feet high. At the distance of about 50 yards are the hot-springs, seven in number. The temple is very old and built of stone.

About two miles east of Tulsi Śyām is a small ditch called Bhimchas, into which the river Zameri falls from a height of 12 feet. It is about 150 feet long, 7½ feet broad, and 10 feet deep. Near it is a small temple dedicated to Kuntījī, mother of Bhīma. It is said that Bhīma struck a ploughshare against the ground and got water for his mother, and hence the name of the place.

III. 10. Sutra'pāda. The temple of Chyavanēśvara stands between the village and the beach with the Chyavanakunḍa in front. This kunḍa or tank is 20 feet long and 18 feet broad. Its water is considered holy, and people from surrounding villages bathe in it on holidays.

There is an old temple of the sun near the beach at a little distance from the Chyavanakunḍa with the Surajkunḍa in front. The temple is in a decayed state and the inscription on the door frame is corroded. The words that are legible are संवत् १२९७ ना वरले चैत्र वदं. It is about 30 feet long, 13 feet wide, and 30 feet high.

III. 11. Dka'mlaj. Chakra Tīrtha, otherwise called Vishnu Ganga, is a tank to the west. It is 40 feet long and broad. There is the following inscription in Dellabodha character carved on a stone lying under a pippala tree:—

ॐ नमः श्रीगणेशाय ॥ पशु पातुकुलारातिर्विषं विश्वंभरो हरिः । जनां पुनातु

North-west of this tank is a cave of ordinary size containing the linga of Natesvarn Mahadev.

III 12 Kadvar, a village between SutrApada and Pattan, has a very old temple of Varahaji built after a peculiar fashion. It is said that this temple was built by the brother in law of a king called Nanda. The temple is about 40 feet long 33 feet wide and 20 feet high, and is very old. Its dome is supported by 12 square pillars. It is built of stone and its cross beams are made of sandal wood. South east of this temple is the Varahakunda, which is 30 feet long and broad,

III 13 Gorakhamadhi cave temple is entered from the north and contains the images of Gorakhnatha and Machhendranatha. It is 30 feet long and broad. The head of the monastery has a grant of twelve villages for necessary expenses.

III 14 Vera val Pattan (1) About 10 miles from Pattan are the two tanks known as the Prachikundas through which the river Sarasvati flows. Near this tank is the old pipala tree called Prachi pipala. At a distance of about 20 yards north of these tanks is the image of Madhvirajaji placed in the Sarasvati under the shade of the jambu tree. The place is considered holy and is visited by pilgrims and those who suffer from evil spirits.

I b (2) The old temple of Somanatha stands on the sea shore. Most of it is destroyed and its materials are used by the people for building purposes. The standing part consists of two chambers covered with domes which are decorated with sculpture and niches filled with mythological images. The first dome is supported by 65 pillars and the second dome is a silkhara. What remains is 90½ feet long 68 feet broad, and 43 feet high. It is said that this temple was built in the Valabhi year 850.

III (3) The new temple of Somanatha was built by Abayabhai of Indor in Samvat 1839.
 The courtyard is 127 feet long and 82 feet broad and the temple proper is 39 feet long and broad and 12 feet high. The court contains a dharma sala built by Virthal Devaji late Divan to the Gakhvād of Baroda and two small temples of Annapurna and Ganapati.
 The temple has three domes built after the Muslimā fashion. The shrine contains the linga of Saṅklesvara and under it is a cell 12 feet long and broad containing the linga of Somanatha. The domes are supported by 32 pillars. Pattan is considered a place of great sanctity and people from different parts go there to visit the temple and bathe in the Triveni : i.e. the confluence of the three rivers the Sarasvati Hiranyā and Kapilā.

(9) About 300 yards east of Pattan is the cave of Hinglaj Mat. It is 39½ feet long 28 feet broad and 10 feet deep. The cave though very old, is entire. It is divided into two chambers, one of which contains the image of Hinglaj.

IV.—PORBANDAR.

III.

1. Porbandar. (1) In the east of the town is the old temple of Kedarēśvara which is 54 feet long and 42 feet wide. It was repaired by Bā Śrī Rūpābhā, mother to the late chief, in Samvat 1894. The temple is built of stone and the dome of the mandapa is supported by 26 pillars. The shrine is small and has a śikhara. The courtyard is enclosed by a stone wall, having a gateway in the east, and is 141 feet by 144 containing a dharmaśālā and Kedarakundā, a small tank.

(2) The temples of Lankēśvara and Dudhēśvara have one mandapa, and are in the north of the town. They are very old and built of stone. The ground floor is 39 feet by 51 feet and the dome of the mandapa is supported by 32 pillars and has some sculpture. The śikharas of the shrine are 37 feet high and conical in form.

(3) The Sūrya temple is the oldest and stands in the middle of the town. It appears from an inscription in the interior that it was rebuilt by Bhansālī Kalyāṇjī Shavji in Samvat 1918 (1862 A.D.) It is about 81 feet long, 33 feet broad and 37 feet high. It is built of stone and the dome of the mandapa is supported by 36 pillars. The śikhara is, as usual, conical in form.

(4) The temple of Siddhanātha is very small.

III

2. Chhaya', about 2 miles from Porbandar, contains a castle where the Jethwā princes are enthroned.

III.

3. Miyaṇ. (1) Near this is the temple of Harsata Mātā. It is about 72 feet long, 57 feet wide and 60 feet high. The courtyard contains a dharmaśālā and a small room having in it four idols, which, it is said, were placed there in memory of Jaghndushā and his family who built the temple. It is very old and its dome is supported by eight pillars, one of which bears the words—

संवत् १७१८ बना आसाठ सोद ८ सोमवार दाले जेठवान मारीयाळगो [पाळ] सुसवायो.

The former temple of this goddess stands on the Kōlā Hill. It is very old and out of repair. "Length" breadth is 24 feet.

- III. (2). The temple of Khimeśvara Mahādeva, 5 miles north of Porbandar, was built, as its name indicates, by Khimāji and afterwards repaired by Sultānji. Both these were chiefs of Porbandar. It is about 45 feet high, 51 feet long, and 45 feet broad. It is built of stone and its dome is supported by 6 pillars. A festival is held here on the 14th Māgha Vād, to which the inhabitants of the surrounding villages go.
- III. 4. Bagavadar. Half a mile from this is the temple of Somāditya. It is very old, decorated with sculpture, and contains the idols of Sūrya and Raodel. It is 24 feet by 30. The roof is supported by 18 pillars. Some part of this temple was pulled down by the Rāna in 1868 A.D. as it afforded shelter to the Vāgher mutineers.
- III. 5. Mādhavpur. The only remaining part of the temple of Mādhavarāj is a dome 45 feet high. Its lower part is buried under the ground. A new temple which was built by Bāi Śrī Bādibāi in Samvat 1789 was afterwards extended and rebuilt by Bāi Śrī Rāpālibāi in Samvat 1896. A festival, to which many people go, is held here in commemoration of the marriage of Kṛishṇa, with Rukhmiṇi.
- III. 6. Amardād, near Rānāvāy. About 5 miles east is the temple of Jadesvara, which is 36 feet long and broad and 15 feet high.
- III. 7. Barda' Hills. The temple of Bileśvara stands in the eastern part of the Barda Hills. It is 51 feet long and 45 feet broad. It is said that this temple was built and dedicated to Bileśvara by Sūrajmall Hādā, king of Bundikotā, and that the linga was broken by Alau'd-dīn Khilji. It is built of stone and well sculptured, and is very old.
- III. 8. Vasa'vad. A masjid 150-feet long and 120 feet deep. It looks on to the river Vasāvadi and contains a well, a bath, and a bangald of three storeys with wooden balconies decorated with carving. The south part of it is used by Muhammadan travellers as a halting place. There is a canopy supported by four pillars at each end of the ground floor. In the middle are three marble graves covered by a dome which is supported by 12 pillars. The greater part of the building is carved and it has 32 pillars. It is said that this masjid was built by Ghorī Belum.

- III. 2. Satrunjaya.* The most sacred spot of Jaina worship in Western India. The temples, which are counted by hundreds, crown the top of a high isolated hill, about a mile south of the town of Palitānā in Kāthiawād. It rises gently from the plain to twin summits linked together by a saddle or valley. The temples occupy these two tops with the intervening depression and the whole temple city is surrounded by a high wall with strong bastions and gates. In olden times it was a well fortified stronghold defended by an armed force. Within the outer wall the area is subdivided into fuks or smaller enclaves.

(2) The Pundarika (pundarika, a lotus) shrine is above the main or eastern gateway to the ṭak. Each principal temple has its Pundarika shrine on the east end in front of it. Pundarika or Puṇḍarika Sāmi is said to have been a leading disciple of Rishabhadeva. The image as set up is just a repetition of those of the tṛthankaras and has the sign—the lotus—of the 6th tṛthankara, Pādma-prabha. An exception is the Pundarika shrine in front of No. 57 in the ṭak of Śākarchand Prēmachand, which from the symbol upon it is intended for Pārśvanātha, an image of the same tṛthankara occupying the shrine of the principal temple. This image of Pundarika was, according to an inscription under it, set up by Kāmāde and his son Bhīśaji in Saṃvat 1587.*

(3) This temple, in the north-east corner of the court, contains a large chaumukha in the lower shrine and another in the upper. An inscription† records that a man, whose name is not very distinct, with his family, built the shrine of Śāntinātha in Saṃvat 1620. To the south porch upstairs is a small iron gun, one of those which in days gone by helped to defend the place. On the west of the shrine is a store room.

Images,—4 w, and 7 x, = 11.

(4) To this temple, which is on the west of the last, is set up Rishabhadeva. The interior of the dome is painted in outline representing processions of musicians and others. There are also red-leaded images of Mahishāsura-Mardani and Chakreśvari Mātā. Here are some very old seats built in under some of the images. Some of the rooms in this building are used as storage rooms for storing the jewels belonging to the image in the great temple.

(6) In the shrine is a fine large image of Aṭṭśvara Bhagavān with an elaborately carved sinhasanā and throne-back in cream coloured marble, about 10 feet high. The date upon the image is Saṃvat 1667. In the antechamber are images of Mahākāla and Mahishāsura-Mardani red-leaded as usual. It is only the Hindu images in these temples that are smeared with red paint.

(11) At the south-east corner of the great temple. A plain white-washed hall with white and mottled marble floor. On either side of the antechamber stand colossal white marble images of Ādiśvara and Pārśvanātha, the latter with a nine-hooded snake canopy. In the north-east corner of the hall are two gigantic foot-prints, about the largest on the hill. In the shrine is a colossal seated image of Ādiśvara. The temple is known as the Navā Ādiśvara's temple, and was built by Sangal Tārachand of Surat in Śaṁvat 1821. In the upper shrine is a small chaumukha, and above this, on the projection before the tower, is built a miniature idgāh.

In addition to the foregoing there are rows of small cell shrines attached to the surrounding walls of the Ādiśvara Bhagavān suk, with long corridors in front of them. In these are to be found great numbers of old images and fragments of old *śiṅhāśana*s built into the new work. These show signs of having been dreadfully smashed up at one time. The old figures have had the tops of their noses knocked off but new noses have been excavated from the face. These are, of course, very flat, the cheeks fall in on either side of them, and in many cases the mouths have also been flattened in the operation. They are consequently not very handsome faces, being exceedingly flat. The older marble has yellowed with great age and is in strong contrast with the newer bluish white material. These older images have carved state, the trirāśa sign on the breast, and the nipples picked out with rings and dots of black and red paint which in many cases has partly worn off.

Many of the old yellow marble figures appear to have been carved from the same dull yellow stone from which the old door frames in the temples of Kumārāpala and Sampriti Raja were fashioned. The folds of the wastecloth are distinctly shown emerging from below the folded legs in the centre. The old seats have been beautifully carved and the under cutting, especially in the seat backs, is very delicate.

The most of these fragments are dated, among them being the following dates in the Samat era—1131, 1185, 1187, 1280, 1281, 1310, 1311, 1341, 1870, 1871, 1391, 1118 and 1130—(Compare also old dates in the Chrumukhā tul.)

VIMALAŚI TUL

(52) The oldest temple in this tul is perhaps that of Kumārāpala, close beside the Hattipol or Elephant gate leading to the court of Aditya Bhagvān. The doorway of the shrine is of the same yellow sandstone as that of the temple No (249) on the northern summit. It is intricately carved and looks old. Thus with the two pillars in the front porch which are much of the pattern of those of the great temple at Mudherā in North Gujarat, are, perhaps, the only remnants of antiquity left, the rest having been rebuilt. The main shrine stands in the middle of an inner court which is surrounded on three sides, front and wings with corridors and niches filled with images. The temple is ascribed to Kumārāpala of Anhilwād Pātan, the original temple was probably built by him.

Images,—44 w, 4 n, 9 v and 1 brass = 58

(53) (54), (55) and (56) are four small shrines at the north east corner of Kumārāpala's temple, dedicated to Padmārabha, Ajitanātha, Vasupūjya and Sitala respectively.

Images,—20 w

(57) To the east of the last is the larger temple dedicated to Śāntinātha, having a perfectly plain hemispherical dome.

Images,—9 w and 1 n = 10

(58) To the south west corner of the last is a smaller temple upon a high plinth with a brightly coloured porch, within which Śrīvāsa resides.

Image,—8 n

(59) (60) (61) (62) (63), (64) (65) (66), (67) and (68) are small separate shrines in front and to the west side of No (57).

Images,—55 w, 1 n 1 v, and 11 brass = 61

(69) This temple has a large open pillared hall with three porches, the front porch having double pillars, the inner small ones carrying a prabhātorāṇa. The throne upon which the image is placed is beautifully carved. The exterior of the temple is much like that of No (2) with śaśi śilpī and other Hindu figures around it. This is generally called Jagat Shet's temple, but an inscription* in it says that the image in the shrine, Sumatinātha, was set up by the whole Sangha Kachara Kikā and the rest in Sam. 1810.

(70) To the north-east corner of the last is a smaller temple with carved pillars in front.

Images,—6 w (?).

(71) On the east of the last is another temple of about the same size dedicated to Chandraprabha, which contains a very nicely carved Sukhāsana and throne back. In the hall is an inscription† which tells us that "while Jalāngīr was ruling over the whole of the earth" in Sam. 1682, Hirābāi set up the image and in 1683 made other additions or alterations.

Images,—5 w.

(72), (73) and (74) are beside the last, on the east, and are dedicated to Dhārmanātha, Sambhava and Vimala.

Images,—3 w.

(75) A temple upon a high plinth with one long shrine and three doors and a pillared hall in front. An inscription‡ tells us that in Sam. 1813 an image of Pārśvanātha was set up by Kuyaraji Ladhā, resident of Bhāvanagar. The image of Pārśvanātha has a most elaborate multiple-hooded snake canopying him, the whole cockle-shell shaped with serrated edge.

(82) East of the last is a room containing a half-life-sized model of a camel in plaster, mounted upon which is a male figure holding a festoon in his hands. Underneath him are several figures and one life-sized one behind. Under the middle of the camel, and helping to support it is a block, and between this and the forelegs is left a space which is used as a test of a man's righteousness. If he can squeeze himself through he has no sin. The bottom stone is black and polished by the passing of people through. A thin man might pass, but a fat Baniā would stick.

(85) The Bhulavani or Labyrinth temple, the largest in this tul and looked upon as one of the oldest. An inscription on the principal image within it gives the date Sam 1675. A long rectangular enclosure, surrounded with colonnades, partly open to the sky and partly roofed in, contains within it several shrines built after various plans and curious designs. The main shrine, however, is towards the front end of the enclosure. The eastern portico of this shrine is covered with an exceedingly neat domical ceiling carved in a very friable looking sandstone and white-washed. In the portico on the west is another very elaborate ceiling absolutely overflowing with figures. They are arranged in concentric circles, representing groups, processions and single figures. This ceiling is much damaged. Behind the main shrine is a three storeyed arrangement, containing images on its four sides, the lower storey of which is sunk in a pit, the second storey being on a level with the ground floor. This is what is called Meru Śikhara. Above it is a very elaborate ceiling with a pretty pendant. On the north wall of the west wing of the lower floor, round the base of Meru Śikhara, is a large marble slab with numbers of figures and mythological scenes in relief. Carved upon one of the beams here, and apparently old, is a bas-relief representing four female figures worshipping upon either side of two empty seats or thrones. This favours much of Buddhist design. Fragments of two very old female figures are one on either side of the entrance at the back of the Meru Śikhara. The mutilated bodies are built into the wall. All this lower part of the temple, together with the pillars to the south of this entrance, behind the Meru Śikhara, is without doubt part of an old Hindu temple. In a small blind porch outside the temple, on the west, is another fragment of the old original temple, namely, a beautiful, though small, scroll built into the ceiling. It is a miniature copy of the magnificent scroll lying at Pattan.

(86) and (87) are two small cells, in a low level passage on the east of the Bhulavani temple, built into the sides of the latter under the upper corridor. The first is a gradually painted shrine of Chakresvari Matī, the image being dressed in skirts of silk and gold cloth. The second has a four-armed marble image of Vāgheśvari Mātī seated upon a tiger.

(88) To the east of the Bhulavani temple, and the last in this direction is the temple of Harihara and Ravi Karna. It is dedicated to Śantinātha who sits under a silver-gilt triple umbrella. The date on the base of the image is Sam 1800 Sakā 1726. In the hall is a neat inlaid coloured marble floor. The hall is gaily coloured and is hung with mirrors and chandeliers.

(89) Crossing the roadway we begin the northern half of this tuk with Keśavji Nāyak's temple, which is considered a small tuk in itself, compact and neat. Upon the western side of the enclosure or court and raised considerably above the latter, is the main temple. In the centre of the temple is an enclosed space in the shape of a Greek cross. Within this are five erections,—one in each wing and one in the centre. The central one is called Śaṭraṅjaya, the northern is Mera-Sikhara, the southern Samat-Sikhara, the western Aṣṭāpada, and the eastern or front one Samasarana. The clustered pillars in the hall are very neat. No colouring has been employed, all is pure white. Across the courtyard in front of the temple is the usual Pūṇarṅga shrine, and around the courtyard are rows of cells under long colonnades. Two little shrines are attached, the north-east and south-east corners containing images of Vāgheśvar Mātā.

(128) A small temple upon a high basement at the end of the roadway. The hall is plain and neat. The back of the throne is made up of fragments of two old bricks which are of different designs. The upper fragment is much mutilated, the front of the umbrella being broken off. In the hall is a long inscription* which begins by disparaging Śiva, Vishnu and Brahmā, and declaring that none can do any good but the Jina. It records that Padmasinha and Vardhamana built the temple and installed the images of the 24 Jinas, Santinatha being foremost, in Samvat 1675, and in the next year also Padmasi added other images. The inscription is a good sample of oriental hyperbole. The principal figure has a bird under him as his cognizance and therefore should be either Sumati or Ananti. A short inscription beside the bird calls the image that of Sreyansa, whose cognizance should be a rhinoceros. There is thus a great confusion. The reason of this probably is that as the images come from the marble districts ready made with their symbols upon them and as each man who sets one up generally prefers a particular Jina, if he cannot get the image of that one at the time, he sets up another and inscribes the name that pleases him most irrespective of any previously engraved symbol which it may be he is more or less ignorant of the meaning of.

The Digambara sect have absolutely nude images, whereas the others represent their Jinas as wearing a waistcloth and sacred thread. The interior is painted as usual. The dome has been painted and gilded with considerable care. Two nude brass images stand on either side of the central seated one in the shrine. In a niche on the south side of the shrine is a figure of Mabhākāla with his dog below. It is a nude figure and has been well bedaubed with red paint. Within this temple is an inscription* dated Saṃvat 1686, stating that in that year the image of Śāntinātha was installed by one Ratnasi, of Ahmadābād, and relatives, during the reign of Jahāngir.

THE MOTISHAH TUK.

(133) The Motishah ṭak is a compact, square walled enclosure occupying about the centre of the hill and the valley between the summits. The principal temple was built by Motishah in Saṃvat 1893. In the main shrine is installed Ādinātha, upon a beautifully carved white marble throne, adorned with a gilt crown and breast-plate. Inscriptions† also tell us that in Saṃvat 1893 Shet Shemachandra installed the images of Bāi Divālī and her husband Shet Motichand, and that Khemachand, with his wife, set up the image of Chakreśvari Mātā. Another inscription‡ records the setting up of the images of Shet Motichand and his wives Mājī Bāi and Rupabāi by Bhāi Keśavachand of Bombay in Saṃvat 1903. The hall of the temple is gaudily coloured, but it has a very good inlaid marble floor having the nandyaśvarta symbol in the centre and the svastika on each of the four sides. In pavels on either side of the side-doors are the sacred symbols of Omākāra and Hṛīṃkāra. In a small marble shrine in the hall is an image of Śāntinātha. The exterior of the temple is most vulgarly painted. There are a second and third storey, in each of which a chaumukha is installed.

(134) The shrine of Puṇḍarika in front of the last. An inscription§ tells us that the image was installed by Khemachand, son of Divālī Bāi, in Saṃvat 1893. The hall has an inlaid marble pavement. The walls of this hall serve the purpose of a visitor's book and are pretty well decorated with scrawled autographs especially of Pārśi aspirants

MODI PREMACHAND TUK.

(159) The Modi Premachand ṭuk is the highest group on the hill, and overlooks all the others. From here on a clear day the outline of the famous Girnār hill near Junāgadh may be seen. The interior of the hall of the principal temple of this ṭuk is elaborately painted and gilded with a quantity of inlaid mirrors. This has a very tawdry and vulgar look about it and is in execrable taste. An inlaid marble floor with the nahdyāvarta symbol in the middle. In the shrine is, as usual, Ādinātha with silver-gilt crown and other ornaments. Plaster images above the pillars of the hall represent the aṣṭadikpālas.

The exterior of the temple has representations of the Hindu deities Brabmā, Sūrya, Indra, Agni, Yama, Narasimha, Lakshmana, Hanumān, Rāma, Mahākālī, Ganapati, Vishnu, Varuna, Vāyu, Mahishāsura-Mardāni, Kubera, Śiva, and Varāha, in addition to two filthily indecent figures (the only such things on the hill) accented with red paint. The temple was built by Modi Premachand in Sam. 1843.*

Among them are the Hindu gods and goddesses Mahākālī, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera, Īśa, Sarasvatī, etc. Two inscriptions* in this temple record the setting up of the images of Timamuti (not Bhīma-muni) and Yudhisṭhira in Sam. 1788.

(243) and (244) Two small shrines on one platform, the former with plain and the latter with decorated walls. No. (243) has an inscription* which records its erection in Sam. 1885.

Images,—16 w.

(245) A square plain domed building containing a chaumukha with other figures seated on low benches round the walls and in niches.

Images,—62 w and 3 n = 65.

(246) A small temple facing north with an open pillared hall. The exterior of the walls are very well carved, being of the same class of work as in the Ahmadabad buildings.

Images,—8 w.

(247) A larger temple to the north of the last upon a high basement, with three porches. Inlaid marble floor. The walls and pillars are all painted red, picked out with yellow and black. An inscription† gives its date as Sam. 1905.

Images,—34 w, 2 n and 3 brass = 39.

(249) Temple of Marudevi Mātā, a plain little square temple.

Images,—14 w.

(249) Sampriṭi Rājā's temple with an open hall with three porches. The doorway to the shrine looks like an old frame from an older temple. It is carved in a yellow clay-stone. Round the basement of the temple are eleven plīyats which are said to mark the spots where some of the builders were killed by the scaffolding giving way.

Images,—15 w, 1 n and 1 brass = 17.

(250) Temple of Narsi Keṣavji Nāyak. Interior gaily painted and adorned with mirrors. A long inscription‡ records the building of this temple by Keṣavji in Sam. 1921.

Images,—99 w, 6 n and 15 brass = 120.

Total number of images in the Khartaravasi or Chaumukha Tuk = 759.

(251) and (252) are two temples standing by themselves outside upon the eastern side of the Motishāh tuk, the former to Vimala and the latter to Ananta. The latter has an inscription recording its erection on the hill in Sam. 1893 by Devachand Kalyānchand of Bombay.

Images,—81 w, 1 n and 1 r = 83.

The number, therefore, of free standing images upon the hill, as actually counted in 1889 were 6,416, which, with the innumerable small ones upon the Sahasrakāṭas, tablets and symbols, not detached, amount to more than 10,000; and these are being daily added to.

VIII.—KACHH.

- III. 1. Bhadres'var, 12 miles E.N.E. from Mundra: (1) The large Jaina temple of Jagaduśāh, outside the village, has been largely rebuilt and repaired at different times: on the walls and pillars are some inscriptions, but only very partially legible (see Archæol. Report, IV, Ind., vol. II.). (2) Two old mosques, one much buried up in the sand, the other in tolerable repair. (3) Beside an old kunḍa is a temple of Mātā Āśīpūrā; and on a broken pillar is an inscription dated 'Sinhā' 1368 (A.D. 1302). (4) The dargāh of Pīr Lāl Shohhāl has an old Arabic inscription along the upper course of the wall. The foundations of the old city of Bhadrāvātī extend over a large area close to the modern town (Archæol. Report, IV, Ind., vol. II.).
- IIb. 2. Bhuvad, 7 miles N.N.E. from Bhadres'var: An early temple of Bhuvaneśvara Mahādeva, of which the shrine has fallen, but the maṇḍapa, still remains, and is a good example of the early Kachh style. It bears an inscription, very illegible, but dated Samvat 1246 (A.D. 1100).
- III. 3. Vira, 6 miles east from Bhadres'var: The kubā or domed tomb of Pīr Jādā, a Sayyid from Sindh, built by Nayi Punjā, about 250 years ago. The temple of Yogidevī, rebuilt by Gurji Motichand of Anjar, about 30 years ago; brāhṁha ceremonies are performed at the kunḍa by the Hindus of surrounding villages.
- III. 4. Anjar, 16 miles north-east from Bhadres'var, and 22 south-east from Bhuj: No remains of much interest, most of the temples, &c., having been rebuilt after the earthquake of 1819. It contains the sthānas or sacred places (1) of Ajayapāla—said to have been a prince of Ajmir (Tod's Rājasthān, vol. I. p. 205n): the head of the matha has a copper-plate grant of Samvat 1673, and two others: (2) of Jesal or Jesar Jir, said to have been a notorious freebooter who was reclaimed by Turi, a Kāṭhī woman: (3) Temples of Wankal Mātā, Mahādeva Bades'vara, Ambā Mātā, and Māhanrāi,—but of little interest.
- III. 5. Barai, near Mundra. Temple of Mahādeva Nilakantha, built in 1668 A.D. The linga is said to have been brought from Bhadres'var.
- III. 6. Gedi, 13 miles north east from Rāpur (lat. 23° 44' N., long. 70° 45' E.) said to be the ancient Vairātīnagarī; old coins are found about the locality. (1) Mālan Vāv, of which the pillars are half buried in the ground and the well overgrown with trees; an inscription said to have belonged to it, lies in the temple of Achales'vara, and is dated in 1476 A.D. (2) Temple of Mahādeva Achales'vara, said to be about 300 years old, but built on an older site by a Sāchora Brāhmin. (3) Temple of Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa, built in 1541, on the site of one destroyed by the earthquake, some of the old images remain, and in a niche over a Ganapati is an inscription of Samvat 1675. (4) Temple of Mahāvīra, containing images of Ādiśvara dated Samvat 1534, and of Śāntinātha dated Samvat 1925. (5) On an image of a Kshetrapāla in the bazar is the date Samvat 1268. The tomb of Ashaba Pīr is only a platform with tombs on it.
- III. 7. Rav, 9 miles south-west from Gedi: The temple of Ravechī Mātā, built by Simabū Mātā, the priestess, in 1822 A.D., on the site of a very old one, and at a cost of 24,000 koris; the temple maintains about 500 cows and feeds all travellers. On a pāṭiyā is the date Samvat 1328 "when Arjunadevi of Anahillipattan reigned through his viceroy Māhadeva the temple stands on the verge of a fine Lunda"

- III 8 Movana, 14 miles north east from Gedi. The old site is to the north of the village, and there are two caverns in the hill.
- III 9 Kanthkot 16 miles south west from Riv and 36 north east from Anjar. (1) A Jaina temple of the 13th century, much ruined and having some abraded inscriptions one dated Samvat 1340. (2) Temple of Sārja containing an image of that god. (3) Temple of Kanthad in the, a neat small shrine on the site of the old one destroyed by the earthquake. It belongs to the Kunphāṭ sect.
- III 10 Varnun 25 miles south east from Gedi and 24 E N E from Chitrod. On the edge of the Ran is an old temple said to date from the time of Māhārāja. It is small, with three porches. In repairs executed in 1851 an inscription is said to have been plastered over.
- III 11 Chitrod, 13 miles E S E from Kanthkot. Four old and much dilapidated temples at Mewasa, about a mile to the north have been sculptured. The temple of Mahadeva at the ruins of Beti, a mile east of Mewasa, has an inscription of Samvat 1559.
- III 12 Lakadiya, 11 miles south east from Kanthkot and 8 south west from Chitrod. mandr built by Jadeja Devaji in 1760 on a platform. It is octagonal and said to be about 10 ft in diameter and 14 ft high, with balconies and a dome.
- III 13 Katariya 5 miles south east from Lakadiya. A small temple of Mahadeva Bhadesvara on the west of the village erected in 1683 by a Bhatiya. Pāṭiyās or satis on the bank of the Lunda bear dates Samvat 1684, 1764 &c. The Jaina temple in the bazar is deeply buried in the earth and dilapidated, but has been richly carved.
- III 14 Sikarpur, 4 miles south east from Katariya. The tombs of the pirs Patha Gelrinshāh Multāni and Ashubrah are of no interest.
- III 15 Manfara, 7 miles west from Kanthkot. A temple and monastery.
- III 16 Sikra 15 miles south west from Kanthkot and 3 W N W from Bhachau. The ruined temple of Kagesvara, two tombs of Momasa Kunbis built in 1607 of good workmanship, a pir's tomb on the site of the old town, and a fine Jaina temple of Vasupujya built in 1717, also some old pāṭiyās.
- II 17 Kotai, 13 miles north from Bhuj. A fine old temple attributed to Lakha Phulani, and well worth preserving. Also others more dilapidated but all of considerable age. Perhaps of about the 10th century (Archaeol Reports vol II).
- III 18 Bhuj the capital. (1) The tombs of the Rava much injured by the earthquake in 1819, but several of them are deserving of repair and preservation. In the tomb or chhatra of Bārmalji is a pāṭiyā bearing an inscription commemorating the sati of Bai Śrī Lilavati, daughter of Māndalka of Jān gad in Samvat 1688. The chhatra was erected in Samvat 1714. Another inscription in the chhatra of Prāgnmalji gives the date of his death.

in Saṃvat 1772, Śaka 1637; and states that he married the daughter of Rāv Rāvālsingh of Idar. (2) The old palace has some good architectural details. (3) The mosque inside the gate is of some interest. (4) There are temples of Suvarṇarāya, Kalyāṇeśvara, Svamaṇḍapa, &c.

- IIb. 19. Kheda, 11 miles south from Bhuj and 18 north from Mundra: said to have been the capital of Lākṣā Phulāni. The vimāna of a very fine temple of about the 10th century remains, and is well worth preservation; the maṇḍapa was thrown down by the earthquake (see Archæol. Rep., vol. II). Near the town is a fine modern tomb and other buildings raised by Ghulām Ali Shāh Kāḍivāl since A.D. 1792; they belong to the Khojahs or Shāh-Imāni-Ismaeli sects introduced into Gujarāt by Sudru'd-din; they reverence Ali and Fatima, their sons Hasan and Husain, and Muḥammad, of whom they have representations but without faces.

- III. 20. Māndavi, 23 miles west from Mundra and 24 south-west from Khola: (1) Temple of Sundaravara, belonging to the Vaiṣṇava sect, built by the Darbār in Saṃvat 1631, but is going to decay; the maṇḍapa is domed and surrounded by parapet walls. (2) Rāṇeśvara, built by Kamābāi, the sister of Bhārmalji, in Saṃvat 1684; it is larger and finer than Sundaravara, the dome being supported by 16 pillars; it is a Śaiva shrine. (3) Lakṣmī-Nārāyaṇa, built by Sāth Topan in Saṃvat 1664, and is larger than the others. (4) Rāṣṭhodji Mahārāja, of the Vallabhāchārya sect, is of two storeys. (5) Qāziwālī Masjid, Saṃvat 1665, ruined by the earthquake. (6) Jamī Masjid, Saṃvat 1660, built of materials from a Hindu temple, but also ruined; neither mosque was of much pretensions.

- III. 21. Gundiylai, 3 miles S.E. from Māndavi: Temple of Rāval Pir, built by two Shēts in 1820, on the shore, and visited by Hindus and Musalmans at the annual fair.

- III. 22. Bagāda, 7 miles north-west from Bhadrēśvar: between this village and Vāghorā is a small temple of Phulkeśvara, rebuilt about 1838; also the Selora step-well, restored in 1854.

- III. 23. Godhra, 8 miles north-west from Māndavi: The town was built in 1609; the temple of Chaturbhujarāya Saṃvat 1776, and another smaller one Saṃvat 1751, are of little interest.

- III. 24. Vinjān, formerly Kāñchibī-Pāṭṭan, 2 miles west from the present village, was a place of importance, and coins are sometimes found on the site, where also is a shrine of Kālā Mātā. The temple of Rakheśvara Mahādeva, at Viñjān, is 15 ft. by 35 ft., built of hard yellow stone, Saṃvat 1688.

- III. 25. Guntri, 26 miles north from Viñjān and 36 W.N.W. from Bhuj: The ruins of a deserted city, surrounded by walls with towers 2250 yards in circuit. It was the capital of the Sindh Rājputs, perhaps about A.D. 1200, and deserves examination. (Trans. R. As. Soc., vol. III, p. 586).

- III. 26. Lakhadi, 16 miles south-east from Guntri and 18 west from Bhuj: Near it and Majal another village to the south-west is Puvragad or Paddhargal, an ancient fort, said to have been built by Potharā Gabini, the nephew of Lākṣā Phulāni. The walls are 2385 yards in circuit. The larger palace is about 55 ft. square and 20 high, built of large blocks of stone and with considerable taste, it is of two storeys, and the upper was supported by 84 round pillars, about 7 ft high and mostly of single blocks of stone, having square capitals ornamented with the heads of men and animals. The porch and colonnade in front are carved. The area in the centre is open to the sky. The smaller palace called Addhatara, is about 40 ft long by 23 wide, of one storey, with front and pillars carved, but inferior to the larger one. The Mint is a heap of ruins, but there is a small building in the enclosure which has perhaps been a temple. The gateway on the west is a very narrow one. Near it is a fine old Saiva temple, similar to the one at Kheda, with sculptures. To the west of the fort are two temples of the Meghavalas or Dheds now in ruins, one of them is on a platform, 70 ft by 50, it has pillars 10 ft high supporting a very fine dome, and the shrine door is richly sculptured. The other is quite a ruin. These ruins are probably of about the same age as the remains at Kheda and at Dhumli in Kathiawad.

III. 27 Kothara, 9 miles north-west from Vijain. The great Jain temple of Śāntinātha, built in 1802, at a cost of 16 lakhs of Rupees, is similar to that of Hathuringh at Ahmedabad.

III. 28 Dhinedhar, 27 miles north west from Bhuj and 12 ENE from Guntri. The chief seat of the Kānpthas, with a small temple of Dharmanātha the founder of the sect, and other buildings, on a hill 1,260 feet high.

III. 29 Kora, 2½ miles WNW from Guntri and 5 north-west from Mañh. The ruins of the medī or house of Pīr Aliyājī, of little interest.

III. 30 Mata no Madh. On a hill to the north east is a small temple to Āśāpūrī, built about 1745. At the top of a hill called Jāgorā Dongar, 2 miles to the north, is a small shrine dedicated to Āśāpūrī. The temple of Āśāpūrī at Madh is said to have been founded in the 13th century, but was destroyed by the earthquake and rebuilt in 1824, it has a pralashind and is 58 feet long by 32 wide. The Āśāpūrī sect of ascetics are devotees of Āśāpūrī, who is the Kula devatā of the Jaisa clan. The temple and kunda of Chachar are partly hewn out of the sandstone rock, the water is charged with sulphates and used in the manufacture of gum.

III. 31 Patgad or Vaghra Chavadi's gaḷ 10 miles north of Kora and near Sairā and Arāli. the site of an ancient city extending about 3 miles along the banks of the stream, with two forts, much of the materials have been carried off to build the town of Lakhpat. To the west of the site is a cave with a small 3½ feet long by 30 wide, the roof supported by two 16 sided pillars with capitals, their shafts being 8 feet high, to the right is a room 12 feet square with a carved door and beyond it is a third, while a fourth is in the back of the hall. The temple of Katesvara was rebuilt in 1820, on the east of it is the kunda with stone steps. The temple of Kalika Mata was rebuilt in 1839 of old materials.

III. 32 Lakhpat, 6 miles west of Sairā. The kuld of Gosa Muhammad, begun in 1855, on a platform 5½ feet square and 7 high is octagonal and about 3½ feet in diameter, of black stone and richly carved with fine stone lattice work, it is floored with marble and has a marble canopy over the grave.

III. 33 Chher, 7 miles south west from Lakhpat. The kuld of Bāli Chātrā is of brick and not so noteworthy.

- III. 34. Bakanoj, 4 miles north-east of Amara, on the north bank of the river Kinnar and the south side of the Sanandhro: the ruins of an ancient town, extending for more than a mile, with heaps of ruined temples and other buildings. The tomb of Kara Kâsim is a mile west of Amârâ; he is worshipped by both Hindus and Muhammadans, and a legend is told of him, which would identify him with Muhammad bin Kâsim, 712 A.D.
- III. 35. Nârâyansâr, 18 miles south-west from Lakhpat and 26 west by north from Mañh, a place of reputed sanctity, and a rival to Dwârakâ. The temples were erected by a Râñi of Râv Desalji I. in Saṃvat 1780 (A.D. 1734), and are of considerable splendour. That of Trikamarâya is 72 feet long by 68 wide; it has three porches and a maṇḍapa, supported by pillars 12 feet high with capitals, and having cusped arches between; the domes are carved; the doors are plated with silver; the image is of black marble on a siṃhâsana of silver work, and over it are 40 gold and silver chhatras. In the same enclosure are temples to Kalyāṇarâya, Lakshmi, Dwârakânâtha or Rañichhodaji, Govardhananâtha, Âdinârâyana and Lakshmi-Nârâyana, with inscriptions of Saṃvat 1790 and 1797.
- III. 36. Kotesvar, close to Nârâyansâr: On a mound to the north-west is a walled enclosure with a temple of Koṭeśvara Mahâdeva, built, or rather re-built, in 1820; beside it is a smaller one to Kalyâṇeśvara; at the pier is the Gayâkṛpda; also the temples of Nilakaṇṭha, Kanakeśvara or Jug Dado, and Rûpeśvara.

IX.—SĀVANTVĀDI AND KOLHĀPUR

SĀVANTVĀDI.

Nerur, 15 miles north of Sanduriddi

Inscriptions —A number of copper plate grants were found here many years ago (see I. B. H. R. A. S., vol III pt ii pp 203, 212-338, Ind. Ant. vols VIII and IX.)

KOLHĀPUR

In the valuable Statistical Report on the Principality of Kolhapur, compiled by Major D. C. Graham in 1834, almost all the antiquities are noticed in some detail

1 Kolhapur, the capital, 68 miles south from Satara (16° 43', 74° 17')

- II 8. (1) The temple of Ambabai Mahalashmi is in the middle of the town, about 100 yards north west from the Rajasol palace. The main portion of the building is of two storeys, and is built of black stone from local quarries. The śikhara or spire is said to have been put up by a Simharivarjya of Satara with 7 in norms harmonized with the carved stonework below which is carlier work but still much later than the better Chidambaram work of the Kumbakonam district. The lower work is of the same age and style as that of the temple of Kopsam at Kumbakonam. The greater part of an older and smaller temple still exists with its own columns inscribed in the usual style, as it were, within the larger building and in the smaller subsidiary shrines in the courtyard we find still more of this old work. All this is of great old Chidambaram masonry, but it is now so much encrusted with whitewash that the minutest details of the carving are obliterated. The liberal coatings of crude whitewash with which the walls are covered throws them into violent and painful contrast with the well finished black stone work which they surmount. The walls are covered outside by a multiplicity of mouldings, and with figures in niches along the upper portion of the lower story. The plan is cruciform, with three shrines—of Ambabai as the principal one, Mahalashmi on the left and of Mahadevaswami in a smaller one on the right. The length from east to west is 144 feet, and from north to south 157 feet, and the total height of the śikhara 52½ feet. The outer and principal pranālapas and the vestibule of the shrine are crowded with columns. In the court are many necessary buildings. The Navagraha and Seshaswami temples, said to have formed parts of Jaina basties were removed from other parts of the town and fitted up in the enclosure. The carving on them is very good.

- II 8. Inscriptions —To the left of entrance on the left side of the porch or outer mandapa, in Devanagari characters dated Śaka 1113, (2) on a pillar on the left hand after entering the courtyard also in Devanagari, Śaka 1113, (3) on a pillar of the small temple of the Navagraha to the left of the main building, in Devanagari, (4) and a fourth is behind the temple, on the left hand when entering from the eastern gate (see Graham's Kolhapur, p. 330 ff Nos 11, 13, 17, 19, 23, 24, and 27) (5) gathered at the Town Hall are some inscribed stones in Kānarese and Devanagari. (6) on a beam in the mandapa of the Seshaswami temple.

- III. 12. Samangad, 14 miles east from Bhādhargad, was dismantled at the same time.
- III. 13. Ra'yaba'g, about 50 miles south-east from Kolhāpur and about 14 miles north-east of Chikodi ($16^{\circ} 29'$, $74^{\circ} 50'$). It is said to have been the capital of a Jaina principality in the 11th century, as were also Berud, Kheina and Sankeśvara. (1) The Jaina basti is said to be the oldest building in the place. It is of black stone, 76 ff. by 30 ft, with massive pillars supporting the roof (Bom. Sel. C&F., p. 4) (2) Temple of Narasimha is an under-ground structure, 31 feet by 26 feet, with a modern sabha-mandapa added above. The image is said to be very well carved. (3) Temple of Siddheśvara on the west side of the old village is 168 feet long by 136 wide; it is of black stone, much dilapidated, but now being repaired. (4) Temple of Sômeśvara is of kurundi or red stone richly worked, but falling to ruins. (5) The dome of Randullā Khān is about 32 feet long, 20 wide, and 22 feet high. It is being destroyed by vegetation.

Inscriptions.—One on two slabs in the Jaina basti, dated Śaka 1124 (Graham's No. 9, pp. 330-415); a Persian one in Randullā Khān's dome, stating that it was built by Abu Bakr Vazir, and that it cost Rs. 10,300.

- III. 14. Khedra'pur' on the Kṛishnā, 30 miles east from Kolhāpur and 7 miles south-east of Kurundwād ($16^{\circ} 37'$, $74^{\circ} 45'$), held in indm by the Svāmi of Sankeśvara. (1) The temple of Kopeśvara is a comparatively late structure of the style of the great temple in Kolhāpur city and that at Yeot near Poona. Moreover, it has never been finished, save with rude brick and plaster in the most vulgar style. The workmanship, though elaborate and careful, lacks the finish, delicacy, and richness of design which are found in the older work. There is a clumsiness and stiffness in all the figure sculpture never found in the latter. Before the temple stands an unfinished open hall which would have been an imposing and ornate building had it been completed. It was intended that it should have had a magnificent domical ceiling, as a few lower courses of the moulding shew; but this unfinished top has been crowned, in later times, by a very ugly, low, crenelated, rough brick parapet in the very worst taste. The whole of the spire of the temple is of similar workmanship. This temple probably occupies the site of an older one, for fragments and pillars of a genuine old Chūlukyan shrine lie about, and are built into the gateway to the temple enclosure and elsewhere. In the village at a short distance from this one is a small Jain temple of about the same date, judging from the style. In the village of Jugal are some old pillars, but no sign whatever of any old temple having been built there.

Inscriptions.—By the south door of the great temple is a Devagiri Yādava inscription of Simhadeva in Devanāgarī date Śaka 1135 (Graham's No. 10, pp. 418-424).

I b. Inscription.—A Śilāhāra inscription on a stone in old Kānarese characters dated Śaka 1040, making a grant to a Jaina temple (Graham's No. 2, pp. 349-356).

III. 17. Sirol, 4 miles north of Kurundwād (16° 44'; 74° 40'). "There are a few very sacred temples here in excellent preservation, and one especially called Bhojaputra and dedicated to Dattātreyā, an incarnation of Śiva" (Graham's Report, p. 324).

18. Honur, 8 miles south of Kāgal (16° 27'; 74° 20').

III. Inscription.—Of Ballāḍadeva and Gandharāditya (Graham, No. 22).

19. Savagaon, 3 miles east of Kāgal.

III. Inscription.—On the āsana of the image of Pārśvanātha in a Jaina temple (Graham, No. 18).

20. Sidaorli, 4 miles south-west from Kāgal. Temple of Siddheśvara.

III. Inscription.—Dated Śaka 1199, on a slab in the wall of the portico of the temple (Graham, No. 16).

21. Bamni, close to Sidaorli.

I b. Inscription.—In a Jaina temple, dated Śaka 1073 (Graham, No. 5).

"The territory throughout," says Graham, "teems with religious edifices, and every village is most amply supplied with temples, endowed with all the appliances in wood and stone requisite for the purposes of the grossest superstition."

MIRAJ, &c.

III. 1. Miraj, 28 miles east from Kolhāpur (16° 50'; 74° 43'). Durgāh of Pīr Sham-namir about 60 feet square, built of black stone and the dome of brick. The outer and inner courtyards are surrounded by corridors. Some verses from the Qurān are on the dome inside.

III. 2. Mudhol, 16 miles E.N.E. from Kalidgi (16° 20'; 75° 21'). Two old granite temples in the Jaina style, dedicated to Śiva.

III. 3. Loka'pur, 8 miles E.S.E. from Kalidgi. A temple of Lokanātha of sandstone, of fair size but probably of no great age.

Inscription.—A short one.

III. 4. Panchgaon, 4 or 5 miles to the west of the village, on the high road from Belgaum to Kalidgi, close to the roadside and apparently in Native States' territory, there is a small but typical temple, probably of Jaina origin, which will before long fall down if the sides, which are bulging out, are not repaired or propped up. At Panchgaon itself there is a very small līṅga shrine of rather peculiar construction, and the remains of another like it beside it.

* Return of the Political Agent, Kolhāpur, No. 310, of 17th September 1879. For other remains in the Miraj territory, see under Dhārwar Zilla, p. 159, "Lakṣmīnārā."

"Chronogram of the auspiciously inaugurated Tānkah.
When in the mosque of the good Muḥāfiẓ Khān,
The wonderful reservoir of saccharine nature was completed,
I asked for the chronogram of the year from the invisible world.
A celestial herald replied:—'The fountain of paradise-water'
1059 [began 15th January 1649]."

As some slight mistakes were made in Prof. Blochmann's decipherment of the inscriptions in Rānī Siprī's (p. 68, No. (4),) and Dastur Khān's (p. 69, No. (13),) mosques, when copied in 1874, the readings of these two inscriptions are here given afresh:—

4. From Dastur Khān's masjid¹:—

5. From Rānī Siprī's mosque:—

قال الله تبارك وتعالى وان المساجد الله فلا تدعوا مع الله احدا وقال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم من بني مسجد الله تعالى بني الله له قصر في الجنة بني المسجد في عصر السلطان والامام المودع بنائيد الرحمن شمس الدنيا والدين ابو الفتح مظفر شاه بن محمود شاه بن محمد شاه بن احمد شاه بن محمد شاه بن مظفر شاه السلطان خلد الله ملكه بانيه المسجد المذكور والداه ابي بكر خان بن سلطان محمود شاه السماء براني سرائيني شهر سنة اربع شمسه سنة العشرين وتسعمائة

6. Over the central mihraab of Sayyid 'Alamu'd-dīn's masjid (p. 69, No. (14),) is the following inscription:—

كعبه آسالم دولت دين مرب است • شهر ياري كه شهنازه جهانش لقب است
لبرقار وكرم ومكنش اندر حست است • سيد عالم ابو بكر حسى نيت است
[نه] من و با نزهة و فرة ماه رجب است

"It is the first of the month Rajab in [nine] hundred and fifteen" [26th October 1509].

7. On Qutub'd-din Shah's Mosque' (ante p. 70, No (18),) over the central mihdrab, is the following inscription, which however has been brought from elsewhere and inserted within the last few years :—

Translation.

"Allāh, who be blessed and exalted, has said.—'Verily the mosques belong to Allāh, therefore do ye not invoke any one with Allāh.' And the prophet, upon whom be the benediction of Allāh and peace, has said.—' Who builds a house for Allāh, Allāh will build a house for him in paradise.' The edifice of this mosque was constructed in the reign of the Sultan of Sultans Ghiyāthud-dunyā wa'd-dīn al-Muhammad, Muhammad Shāh, son of Ahmad Shāh, son of Muhammad Shāh, son of Muzaffar the Sultan, by the slave who has need of the aid of Allāh. I mean by Nizām the son of Halālū's Sultan who bears the title of Mukhtis'ir-Mulk Maimanat-qarīn, desirous for the approbation of Allāh and hoping for his abundant reward This was [indited] in the era from the exile of prophethood, on the the sixth of the blessed month Ramadān in the year eight hundred and fifty-three [21th October 1419]."

8. On Nawāb Shuj'rāt Khān's tomb (p. 70, No (19),) is an in-scription in which no name of the person buried is given; it is as follows. —

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم لا اله الا الله محمد رسول الله قل يا صائبي الدين سرفوا علي اعسم لا تعظموا من رحمة الله ان الله يعثر الذنوب جميعا انه هو الغفور الرحيم تاريخ وادته الرابع عشر يوم الخميس في شهر مفر سنة الف وماية الفث عشر من الهجرة النبوية

" In the name of Allāh, the merciful, the element ! No God but Allāh, Muhammad the messenger of Allāh. Say, O my servants, who have transgressed against your own souls, despair not of the mercy of Allāh ; for Allāh pardons all sins, because he is forgiving and merciful.' Date of his decease, Thursday the fourteenth of the month of Safar, in the year one thousand one hundred and thirteen of the prophetic exile " [14th July 1701.]

9. The following inscription occurs over the central mihrab of Bihlj's mosque at Rajapur (ante p. 79, No. (102)) :—

قال الله تعالى وان امساجد الله فلا تدعوا مع الله احدا و قال عليه السلام من بني

Translation.

" Allāh, who he exalted, said, ' Verily the mosques belong to Allāh, therefore do ye not invoke anyone with Allāh.' And he to whom be salutation [i. e. Muhammad] said :— ' Who builds a house for Allāh, he he exalted, Allāh will build a house for him in paradise.' This noble Jamī' mosque [surnamed] ' Mistress of the world ' [Makhdamat Jahān] was built by the great Sultān Quṭbu'd-dunyā wa'd-dīn Abu'l-Muzaffar Ahmad Shāh, son of Muhammad Shāh, son of Ahmad Shāh, son of Muhammad Shāh, son of Muzaffar, the Sultān ; and the Hijra date of the building of the mosque is Rabi' II, in the year eight hundred fifty-eight " [April 1454].

10. On the east of the mosque is a rauza, with some good open lattice work, and containing a marble qadr or tomb on which are the following inscriptions round the base : (1) on the east side, —

قل اللهم مالك الملك توتي الملك من تشاء وتنزع الملك ممن تشاء وتعز من تشاء

"To the memory of Subedar Peer Khan Order of merit XIV Regiment, N. I who died on the 19th July 1860, aged 55 years This is erected as a token of respect by the officers of his regiment

The second part is in Urdu but begins with the Arabic Kalimah, and corresponds to the English with the exception of the words "the Sāheb-loq of the regiment have given him much abru," which is not a happy rendering of "token of respect by the officers"; also the Hijrah date 1276 and 30th Dhu'l Hijah is added. The whole text is as follows:—

18. Inscription in the Shāhpur mosque (p. 69, No. (15)) :—

This consists of the following two Persian distiches, with the words حرره دوست محمد "written by Dust Muhammad Sakhar" on the intersection of the bars which separate the lines in the shape of a cross surrounded by a frame :—

21 Inscription in 'Ināyat Shāh's mosque,—a ruined brick mayil near the Shāhpur gate (p 74, No (47))

It begins with Qurān LXXII. 18, like the above, but the usual saying of the prophet is omitted then we have —

“Year nine hundred and sixty” [Began 10th December 1652]

21. Over the right mihraû, in the 'Shâh Ali's mosque, Rohilwâda.

This contains nothing but the pedigree of the penultimate king Ahmad, thus:—

Then come two distiches in mixed language which I am not bold enough either to transcribe or to translate, but give only the chronogram embodied in the last distich:—

مسجد جامع کي بيم بتهايا ني نور

As Ahmad, the penultimate king of Gujarât, who began to reign A.D. 961 [began 7th December 1553] was only eight years on the throne, and the kingdom was finally annexed to the dominions of the Mughal emperor Akbar in 969 [began 11th September 1561], the inscription appears to have been made even after the reign of the last king of Gujarât, Muzaffar Shâh III.

25. In the small mosque of Musa Subâg on the right side of the road to the camp (see above No. 17) —

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم انما يعمر مساجد الله من آمن بالله واليوم الآخر واقام الصلوة

Then the following two Persian distiches —

26 Arabic inscription on Dildā Harīr's Vav or step well (p 80, No (110))

It will be seen from the inscription that this Vav was constructed during the reign of the same King Mahmud, surnamed Bigarab, under whose sway the Herātī mosque, that in the Gāikwād's Haveli, Bibi Achut Kukra, Dastur Khān's, and others were built. The illegible portion of this inscription probably contained the name of this king's Vazir, Malik Malik Ghānt, which likewise occurs with variations in other inscriptions. What the figures 26 below may mean is unknown.

26. पाशाकर सू० देवा श्रीगिरिनामहंसाया आनधामहवीर

1556, and of Śala 1421, on Monday the 13th of the bright half of Pausa, (the Bâi) caused a well to be made, wherein, seeing the deep volume of ambrosial water, the milky ocean, as it were, took up its abode

"May it be established as long as the Sun and Moon endure for the sake of sustaining beings taking birth from sweat, eggs, the soil, and the womb The money spent upon the well is 3,19,000¹ The illustrious and charitable chief minister of the king Mahmûd, named Harira, caused this well to be made May this sweet well, pleasing to wayfarers coming from the four directions, be drunk by men, while the Sun and Moon endure Forts, holy groves, tanks by the hundred, choultries at every step, are the pride of rich men, this Bâi, named Śrî Harira, for the benefit of the whole world, having incurred an expenditure of much treasure, caused the well to be made The manager in the making of the well (was) Bihâmâd the executor of the orders of the great king "

دیدم دهر حر مرک حسن کس * که داشت نامت هر مد ناشد
 کار خلق خلقش در زکا پوست * ملک حر سمش پیشوا شد
 سان حرم کوثر برکه ساخت * که کوثر دیدش را رویا شد
 مگر آینه اسکدرست این * که سرتا پا همه نور و مفا شد

Translation

"This age has seen no one except Mirak Hasan,
 Whose character has become the occasion for every praise,
 His whole nature is engrossed with the affairs of the people
 In the realm of beneficence his efforts have become clem[en]t[ia] lar[va],
 He made this reservoir resembling the basin Kaouthar [in paradise],
 Which stands forth as the image thereof
 Is this perchance the [wonderful] speculum of Iskandar [Alexander] ?
 From top to bottom all light and purity
 If it has not become like the Zamzam in pleasantness and limpidity,
 It is [nevertheless] accessible like the Kaabah of necessity [the throne of God]
 (let in all the necessities) apply]
 Of the year of its construction Fârid said —
 The purity of Mirak's reservoir was effected by us"
 [This last he must have given 1000, which year began 16th March 1611]

² The last two lines contain some abbreviated words, and are lacunary etc. they are left untransliterated.

29. On a doorway near Shâh Alijî's in Rohilwâd, Ahmadâbâd (p. 73, No. (37)) :—

Above, some very large characters which may be read الله في محمد "Allâh fecit Muhammad." Below are a number of words indistinctly jumbled together in one mass.

30. Inscription in the gateway of the Bhadr :—

This inscription consists of six distiches, about 5 feet long and $1\frac{1}{2}$ broad. Each hemistich stands in a separate compartment and was carved in relievo in large beautifully flowing Persian characters, but appears to have been purposely defaced by some Vandal. Whether accidentally or not, the most legible words are only two, which seem to read بيت ظلم "house of tyranny." Fortunately the date 1032 being on the margin, outside, was also left untouched ; that year began on the 5th November 1622 when the kingdom of Gujarât had lost its independence, and had been already 52 years annexed to the Mughal empire.

31. Inscription from the entrance to the jail at Ahmadâbâd :—

همایون جاه سلطان ابن سلطان • یکی صاحب پرست از بندگانش
 که هست از جان و دل منتان فرمان • بهار عدل اعظم خان غازی
 که تیغش کشت جسم ملک را جان • سرایی کرد در کجرات بنیان
 که مثلش را ندیده چشم دوران • ز بهی . عالی بنا کز روی رفعت

Translation.

"Humâyun jâh Sultân son of a Sultân
 One of his servants, obeying companions,
 Who with soul and heart is subject to command,
 The spring of justice 'Azam' Khân Ghâzi,
 Whose sword has become the soul of the body of the realm,
 Has built a sardî in Gujarât
 The like of which the vision of the period has not beheld, Bravo ! For the high edifice which in altitude
 Has excelled Saturn by the basis of its excellence.
 In beauty and gracefulness it is like paradise,
 Rudâfa [the gate-keeper of paradise] is worthy to be its porter,
 The top of it has received a complete Qaisariyah
 By order of Khân 'Alîl the jewel of men.
 When of the invisible herald I asked for the chronogram,
 The exclamation came :—'Place of goodness and beneficence.'
 1017 [Began 26th May 1637].

32. In the Borah mosque in Nova Mohallāh, on a marble slab (p. 74, No. (45)).

This inscription belongs to the reign of Ahmad, the founder of Ahmadābād and of Ahmadnagar; several mosques of Ahmadābād were also built during his reign, and it is not improbable that this was carried off from one of them and placed here.

The inscription begins with a Persian distich, and the whole of it is in that language as follows:—

یک ذره نجات تو ای بنده نواز
در ایام دولت و ثبوت سلطه خلیفه العبد و الزمان الواثق المستعان بالله ناصر الدنيا
والدين ابو الفتح احمد شاه بن محمد بن مظفر شاه السلطان خلد خلانته و بنده رانته صارت کرد
این بیت و بقعه شریف لطیف له بنده امیدوار بر رحمت الريدگار حقیر معیاف عالم کبر
نوزدهم محرم الحرام سنه سنه و مشرین و ثمانیاه

Translation.

"O no atom of Thy grace, O cherisher of [thy] servants,
Is better than a thousand years of gifts and prayers."

During the reign of the Khallfah of the period who trusts in and asks help from Allāh Nāsiru'd-dunyā wa'd-dīn Ahu'l-Fath Ahmad, son of Muhammad Shāh, son of Muzaffar Shāh the Sultān, may his Khallfate be perpetuated and his clemency spread, this house and noble, graceful locality was built for [the worship of] Allāh, by the mean, feeble adorer 'Ālamgir who hopes for the mercy of the Creator. The nineteenth of the sacred month Muharram, in the year eight hundred and twenty-six" [24th December 1423].

33. In the Nova Mohallāh mosque, right hand. It will be seen that this inscription belongs to the reign of Maḥmūd [Bigarah] whose name occurs on so many others. There is no Bismillāh, but only Qur'ān LXII. 18, with the usual saying of the prophet about the house in paradise. Then:—

عمل السلطان الاعظم ناصر الدنيا والدين ابو الفتح محمود بن محمد شاه بن احمد شاه
بن محمد شاه بن مظفر شاه السلطان خلد الله خلانته — ثمان عشر بتاريخ الحرام سنه سنه
و تسعين و ثمانیاه

Translation.

"The work of the great Sultān, defender of the world and of the religion, possessor of victory, Maḥmūd, son of Muhammad Shāh, son of Ahmad Shāh, son of Muhammad Shāh, son of Muzaffar Shāh the Sultān, may Allāh perpetuate his Khallfate.....[illegible]. Eighteenth of the month of Muharram in the year eight hundred and ninety-six" [2nd December 1499].

34. In Pir Muhammad Shāh's mosque:—

This is a distich with the Kalimah prefixed, and the name of a person with the date appended, thus:—

لا اله الا الله محمد رسول الله
چراغ و مسجد و محراب و منبر و ابوبکر و عمر و عثمان و حیدر

Translation.

"No god but Allāh, Muhammad messenger of Allāh

Lamp and mosque and mihrab and pulpit

'Abu Bakr and 'Umar and 'Uthmān and Haidar [i. e. 'Alī]

Hadrat Mir Mahiud-din. Year 1135" [Began 12th October 1722].

35. In Pir Muhammad Shāh's mosque. This consists of two Persian distiches between which the writer's name is inserted as well as the date, but for the sake of distinctness that line is given the last in the following transcript:—

خوشا مسجدی ساخت سید محمد • که مردی توانگر و یار خلیلی
سز و کر کعبه کنی تو امانی • که تاریخ او کشف بیت خلیلی
کاتبه عبد الرحمن سنه ۱۰۹۲

Translation.

"Sayyid Muhammad built an elegant mosque

In which the most glorious [God] may be worshipped.

It is proper for thee to trust in the Ka'hah

The date whereof is:—Bait Khalili.

The writer of it was 'Abdu'r-rahman, year 1092."

This date is also the numerical value of the two last words, and their meaning is:—House of Khalil, namely of Abraham in his capacity of the Khalil, namely friend of God.

36. Left of central mihrab, Pir Muhammad's mosque;—

سنه ۱۰۷۷

Translation.

"No God but Allāh, Muhammad the messenger of Allāh. May it be prosperously inaugurated O Allāh I by the merits of 'Abu Bakr, and 'Umar, and 'Uthmān, and All. In the year 1077 [Began 4th July 1666]."

37. Over a window to the left of the central mihrab, in Pir Muhammad's mosque:—

نماند بمعبان کسی در کرو • که دارد چنین سیدی پیش رو
نهدارم که معدی را بآزاری و بگذاری • که از جزایر افکش ندارد درحان جائی

Translation

"No one remains plunged in sin who has such a Sayyid for his guide, I do not think you will injure and abandon Sayyid, for he has in the world no other place, but the shadow of his favour."

38 At Shih 'Alam, over the door of the tomb (p 147, No (24) —

This is a wretched doggerel composition which contains no data nor information of any kind, and the beginning of it is quite sufficient for insertion in this place. It is as follows —

سم الله الرحمن الرحيم المنة چون حمة رسولان حاي للناس قد تعالي انعم وهدا
علامات الحسان اي دارروي الجنة الفردوس بس روم بربور شاه عالم ملا جهان

Translation

After the Bismillah — "Beneficence is like paradise. Rasulabad is a place verily bestowed by the Most High (God) upon man, it contains characteristics of the garden, that is to say the abode of the face of the jinnat of paradise. Behold the adorned rauza of Shah 'Alam, moon of the universe. [Then follows a description of the beauties of the garden, &c.]

39 Round a tomb in the second ruza at Shah 'Alam —

The following two Persian lines make together a distich, —

مد فکر که شد خاک سرم در قدم دوست • این عشق که دارد که مراد در قدم دوست

Translation

"A hundred thank, that my head has become the dust at the feet of the friend
[i.e., at the feet of God]

"Who has this life like that which I have at his feet"

40 Round the railing of the great tomb at Shih 'Alam —

41. Over the central mihrab of the mosque at Batwā (p. 81, (No. 3)) :—

This inscription is of the reign of Mahmūd [Bīgarah]. Like so many others it has no Bismillāh, and begins with Qur'ān LXXI. 18, followed by the usual saying of the prophet about the house in paradise; then we have :—

امير عمارت هذه المسجد الجامع المبارك في عهد ناصر الدنيا والدين ابو الفتح محمود
 بن محمد شاه بن احمد شاه بن محمد بن مظفر شاه السلطان بسعي العبد الراجي الي رحمت الله
 يفتخر سلطاني خواجه المتخاطب من الخصرة الا علي ثغراس الملك — بني في عشر صفر سنة
 اربع و سبعين وثمانماية

Translation.

"The edifice of this blessed Jāmi' mosque was renewed during the reign of the protector of the world and of the religion, the possessor of victory, Mahmūd son of Muhammad Shāh, son of Ahmad Shāh, son of Muhammad, son of Muzaffar Shāh the Sultān, by the efforts of the worshipper hopeful of the mercy of Allāh, Bashīr Sultānī Khāfjah who obtained from his most exalted majesty the title of Khāsū'l mulk [one word is not clear]

Built on the tenth Safar, year eight hundred and seventy four " [10th August 1469]

42 Inscription inside Batwa mosque —

درین حاء سگ پای حارة مدفون است

Translation

"In this well gravel is buried"

43 An inscription on a loose stone at Batwa consists of the following three Persian distiches —

بعد دولت شایسته حانی • که رو کشته سایی دین موسی
بتولق الهی باطر ادراک • بوده محمد نا حوص نعس
بی سال نایش گمت پادی • بگو مسجد شده بست المقدس
س ۱۰۶۳

Translation

' During the incumbency of governor Shāyistah Khān
Who had the foundation of the edifice of religion,
By the divine grace the spectator has Beheld the mosque with the exquisite reservoir
Concerning the year of its construction the guide said,
Say — The mosque has become the holy house [i.e. Jerusalem]
Year 1063 '

The numerical value in the last hemistich gives 1061, whereas the figures sculptured are 1063 which latter year began on the 2nd December 1652

44 On a loose stone No. 2 at Batwa, after the Bismillāh we have Qirā' LXXII 10, and then the following Persian line, which makes a distich —

سور شد جهان دین چهار گوهر • انوکر و عمر و عثمان حدر

Translation

"The universe was illumined by these four jewels,
Abu Bakr and Umar and 'Uthmān, Haider

45 On a pillar of the porch of the great mosque at Batwa —

This consists of the following two Persian distiches with the name of their maker under them as follows —

نظ عالم که هست شاه انلاک • او روبره نرون حاء انلاک
رین پیش کلاه آسمان بی سربود • شد کند او سر کلاه انلاک
حادر ران این درگاه حلال بی محمد بن حلال شاهی کشته

Translation.

"Qutb 'Alam who is sovereign of the spheres
 Has by the rauza augmented the glory of the spheres.
 Ere this the vault of the sky had no crown;
 His Gunbad [sepulchral cupola] became the crown of the spheres.
 Composed by the horn slave of the family Jalāl bin Muhammad bin Jalāl Shāhī."

The following four inscriptions (46—49) are from 'Aḥḍu'l-Wahhāb's mosque (p. 73, No. (40)) :—

46. Over the left mihḍab we have again the usual saying of the prophet about the house in paradise; but as it occurs here in a more elaborate form than hitherto, it may not be quite superfluous to insert the whole of the inscription :—

بِسْمِ اللَّهِ الرَّحْمَنِ الرَّحِيمِ قَالَ النَّبِيُّ صَلَّى اللَّهُ عَلَيْهِ وَسَلَّمَ مَنْ بَنِيَ لِلَّهِ تَعَالَى بَيْتًا بَنِيَ
 بَعْدَ فِيهِ اللَّهُ مِنْ مَالٍ حَلَالَ اللَّهُ تَعَالَى لَهُ بَيْتًا فِي الْجَنَّةِ مِنْ دَرَّةٍ وَيا قُوت

Translation.

"In the name of Allāh the merciful, the clement ! The prophet, may Allāh bless and keep him ! has said :—Who builds from lawfully acquired property, for Allāh, be He exalted ! a house in which Allāh may be worshipped, Allāh, be He exalted ! has built for him in paradise a house of pearls and rubies."

47. A Persian distich :—

مريد و معتقد حصرت محي الدين * بصدق خواجر شهناز انك دهر شود

Translation.

"A disciple and confidential of Hadrat Mahḥu'd-dīn
 In truth Khājā Shāhbaz as the world will exist."

48. A Persian distich :—

بروسر نرح افزاي شاه غياث الدين * ملك سريرت سيد جليل ايش درود

Translation.

"To the joy augmenting rauza of Shāh Ghīyāthū'd-dīn Malik Sarīrat Sayyid Jalīl abundance of greetings."

49. A Persian distich :—

برخست و برنامي شد اماجد دين * از آنچر باشند را طريق حق نود

Translation.

"With permission and approval Amājīd Dīn departed
 With what appeared the proper way of his departure"

The preceding three inscriptions, now on loose slabs, evidently constitute one piece, which is however not satisfactory either in meaning or in style, as must be evident also from the English translation

50 Two Persian distiches —

چو رکن الحق از دار دنیا رفت • بک لفظ در طل طوبی رفت
حر داد هاتف رسال وصال • اریحا هر دوس الا رفت
س ۱۲۰۰

Translation

"When Rukn al haqq [pillar of the truth] from the mansion of the world went,
In a moment he into the shade of the Tabi [name of a tree in paradise] went,
An invisible herald gave notice of the year of the arrival —

Hence to the highest paradise he went Year 1200 [4th Nov 1785—3rd Oct 1786]

51 On a fallen stone in Bāba Lulū's Rauza (p 78, No (92)) —

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم

حود کمت ناربج آن نست رهرا • محمذ که نس بود باحر شد
س ۱۱۱۷
والده محمد جعفر ولد سد محمد علي بن سد محمود سادات ناره ساکن کهنوره •

Translation

' In the name of Allāh the merciful the clement ! No God but Allah, Muhammad the messenger of Allāh, Muhammad All, Fatimah Hussain, Hussain That daughter of Zuhri [planet Venus] has herself pronounced the chronogram the option which was sufficient was completed well Year 1117 The mother of Muhammad Jafar, son of Sayyid Muhammad All, son of Sayyid Mahmud Sidat Bārah, inhabitant of Kilturrah

The above-named year 1117 began on the 26th April 1700, and the three last words باحر شد constitute the chronogram

52 Two Persian distiches on a Qidūs tomb near the Madrasah gave in the last hemistich a chronogram, but as the piece is rather obliterated, and requires guesswork, I shall not attempt to translate it it appears to be one of value

53 In Qutb Shih Divān s ma jid near the K ch Masjid in Ahmadābād —

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم ادخلوها بسلام امن بعد دولت قاهرة و ايام مملکت

Translation.

"In the name of Allāh, the merciful, the element: 'Enter ye therein in peace and security.' [Qurān, sūrah XV. v. 16.] During the period of the conquering monarchy and in the days of the permanent reign of the crown-wearing celebrated Khidiv, the Sultān of the Sultāns of the age, the abolisher of unbelief and of rebellion, the protector of the world and of the religion, Ahmad Shāh, son of Muhammad Shāh, son of Muzaffar Shāh the Sultān, son of Sultān [twice], may Allāh perpetuate his kingdom and augment his monarchy and his sultānship this sepulchre was built by the slave hoping for the mercy of the Nourisher [God] Quṭb bin Kh'ājag. Completion of this pious good work for the sake of acquiring [eternal] joy, in the month of Muharram" [year not given].

"(12) This well by its niches adorned with the images of celestial damsels creates a doubt even in the minds of gods, whether it is heaven, or a celestial mansion, or the great daughter of Jahnu.

"(13) The queen Rudā, the foremost of virtuous women, the poets' desire-fulfilling tree, like Sitā rendered her and her husband's family illustrious by her praiseworthy actions.

"(14) She was a queen by whom a kror of coins were at once bestowed as (if it were worthy as) a straw upon wise kings. (?) No other queen, nor the Kāmādhenu nor the Kalpavallī can be named as an equal to the queen Rudā.

"(15) It is said that for this well 5 lāḥs of tanḱas were brought from the royal treasury by the queen Rudādevī.

"(16) In the good village of Adāḷaj Rudādevī, the beloved queen of Virasimh, made a well adorned with hundreds of niches

"(17) Hail ! While the year 1555 of the era of the king Viḱrama and 1420 of the Saka was current, in the Āshāḍha month and Sis'ira season of the Uttarāyana, on Wednesday the fifth of the light fortnight of Māgha in the nakṣatra of Uttarābhādrapadā in the Yoga called Siddhi and in the Kāraṇa named Biva, the moon being in the Mīnāśī (Pisces), in the victorious reign of Pādśāh Mahamūd, the queen Rudābāī, the faithful wife of Virasimha—Mahāpā's son, the lord of the country of Dandūth, a Vāghḱa, the crest-gem of all kings—made a well at Adāḷj for the benefit of all. The overseer was Mahām, the son of Bhāma of the Srimāll caste. The money spent in building the well was 500,111, or in round figures five lāḥs only. May this continue firm during the existence of the Sun and Moon !"

Literally — "Jesus Christ This is the tomb of the Tabrizian, Shamir's son, the illuminated soul of David Khān To God he was removed in 1170, Gamar 11th ' (30th July 1720)

Or more freely — "This is the tomb of the illuminated soul Dawūd Khān, son of Shamir of Tabriz He was removed to God on the 11th of Gamar in 1170 "

2 INSCRIPTIONS FROM CAMBAY

No 1. Over the north entrance of the Jāmi mosque (p 96)

It appears from the date at the end of this inscription that this mosque was built in the first year of the 19th Pathān Sultān of Hindustān, before Gujarāt had become independent and had its own king.

After the usual Bismillāh comes sūrah LXXII, v 18 of the Qurān, to which also the saying of the prophet, that "for him who builds a mosque for Allāh Allāh will build a house in paradise," is added Then the inscription continues as follows —

هذا ما وقف الله وعابه نبي هذا المسجد الجامع والمارك ومكان الجمعة وكله من حاله
ماله مما الله من فضله وكرمه حاله الله تعالى في عهد السلطان العالم العادل محمد شاه بن
تعلق شاه السلطان حلد الله ملكه وسلطانه اعد الصيغ الراحي الى رحمه الله تعالى وسمه
محمد البوقاري حصل الله مراده ودليل في الثامن عشر من المحرم سنة خمس ومئتين وسبعماية

Translation.

".....This is a waqf [bequest] and dedication to Allāh. This blessed Jāmi' mosque and place for the congregation has all been built from the private property [bestowed] by the grace and bounty of Allāh and offered to Him, may He be exalted; in the reign of the learned and righteous Sultān Muhammad Shāh, son of Tughlaq Shāh the Sultān, may Allāh perpetuate his kingdom and his sovereignty by the feoble worshipper, who hopes for the mercy of Allāh, be He exalted! and for His grace, Muhammad Al-Bātunārī may Allāh grant his wishes and guide him; on the eighteenth Muharram, in the year seven hundred and twenty-five" [5th January 1325].

No. 2. Over the central mihrab in the Jāmi' mosque.

After the Bismillāh comes sūrah IX., v. 18, of Qurān complete, and nothing more.

No. 3. Over the south mihrab in the Jāmi' mosque.

Sūrah III., v. 16, of Qurān beginning of v. 17. Exactly the same as to the set of inscriptions from Rājapur Tomb, west side.

No. 4. Over the north mihrab in the Jāmi' mosque.

Sūrah XXXIV., v. 36, complete, and nothing else.

No. 5. This is a Persian inscription and about the worst of the lot both in caligraphy and in style. It was written during the reign of the 20th Pathān Sultān of Hindūstān and pretends to be poetical. After the usual Bismillāh we have before the text the following superscription:—

بنا کرد این مسجد را بنده حصره سلطنة سلطان فیروز

"This mosque was built by a servant of the majesty of sovereignty Sultān Firūz"
[a few words illegible of the title].

بعد سلطان ظفرخان گسری بابی بنا کرد این مسجد عادل چون سلطانی
وسند شمس و سبعین و هفت صد از هجری محمد * که این مسجد مرمت کشت بر رونق سبحانی
خدا رحمت کند بر بنده کو اندر این مسجد * گوید بر جان و دل دما خبر بر بانی

Translation.

"In the reign of the [above-named] Sultān, Zafar Khān Gustarī,¹ the architect, built this mosque upright like royalty [Sultān].

And in the year seven hundred seventy-five from the Hijrah of Muhammad [Began 23rd June 1373]

This mosque has been repaired for the worship of God [lit., adornment of the glorious.]

² May also be read Al Shustari.

May God have mercy upon the worshipper who in this mosque
Utters from soul and heart a prayer for the architect."

No. 6. On the tomb at the Jāmi mosque, Cambay—upper* and lower baod together.
Contains Qurān, sūrah XXXVI, vv. 28—42 inclusive, complete—the upper beginning with v. 28 and the lower with v. 36.

No. 7. On a reservoir in the court of the Jāmi mosque, Cambay:—

نور من مزمه هذو الرکلا ومجری الماء الی العوض لی سنده الف وثلثین اقل عباد الله الهادی علی بن عبد النبی البغدادی

Translation.

"The repairing of this reservoir and of the water-channel to the basin was completed in the year one thousand and thirty [Began 26th Nov. 1620] by the means of the worshippers of Allāh, the director 'All the son of 'Abdu'n-nabi al-Baghdādī."

No. 8. On a mosque in ruins at the back of Khājā Khezir's tomb (p. 96, No. (7.))

After the superscription بسم الله خير الاسماء "In the name of Allāh, the best of names," come the following seven Persian distiches in elegant Persian calligraphy:—

آن خدیو زمانه مومن خان • حامی دین سید کرین
بندہ جان نثار ار جاوید • کرد حامل سعادت ازین
برکہ ساخت بہر نشہ لبان • تاشغیش شود جناب حسین
خالق و خلق ز بنا خوشنود • واتکہ زوگشت فتح بدر و حسن
لب دربا و چشمہ شربین • کن قشای مجمع البحرین

Translation.

"That Khudiv of the period Mumin Khān,
Defender of the religion of him who is prince of men and angels,
The servant who is always ready to sacrifice his life for him, Attained felicity hereby that he Constructed the reservoir for the thirsty-lipped
That the lord Husain may become his intercessor.
The creator and the creatures are pleased with the building
Whereby the victory of Badr and Husain is glorified.
The shore of the sea and the sweet fountain
Contemplate the union of the two seas
The chronogram of this auspicious edifice
Occurred to my heart in the twinkling of an eye;

The celestial herald said, take the name of the Imām 82

And quaff limpid water to the memory of Husain 1219" [Began 12th Apr. 1804.]

No. 9. Tomb of Khāja Khezir, Cambay.

The upper portion of this inscription is wanting, since what is left contains only the beginning of sūrah II. v. 256, and the end of it.

Also beginning of sūrah II. v. 285, and end of sūrah

II. v. 289, completing sūrah II., the intermediate portions having no doubt been on a portion of the inscription, which is lost. The adjoining figure will better explain what is meant.

Upper portion wanting

No. 10. Tomb of Khāja Khezir, Cambay, about a mile west of the town.

There is no Bismillah, but only "Allāh has said, &c." as before, sūrah LXXII. v. 18, with the saying already mentioned of the prophet, appended. Then:—

صدق الله بنا هذا المكان المبارك وكان ذلك — خواجه خضر — سنة احدى وسبعين وستمائة

Translation.

"Allāh is veracity. This blessed place was built which was [illegible] Khāja Khezir [date of month illegible] in the year seven hundred and seventy-000" [Began 5th Aug. 1369.]

No. 11. Tomb of Khāja Khezir, Cambay.

Like the preceding, namely sūrah LXXII., v. 18, and the saying of the prophet. Then comes a Persian inscription in the style of No. 5 consisting of the following six distichs:—

حد مقام خواجه خضر و کعبایت • مهتر الیاس را از ابتدا
بود صد ساله اما قدیم خلعت • یافت بود از باری تعالی سخت
بنده را قبور داد کرد کار • از حلال بهال خوه کرد بنا
چو داد چو دوزخ آن نبه • ساخت از اساس نور بهر خدا
تا نباید آزاد مرد جواب • اعمال نیست غیر رما
عالم زمان بلا خیز • هست مدو احد و سمن

Translation.

"Boundary of the Maqām of Khāja Khezir and of Cambay"

The senior Ibrah from the beginning!

He was a centenarian, but had of yore eternity

- Received decidedly from God, who be exalted.
 The creator bestowed tombs upon His worshipper
 Who built them up from his own legal property ;
 That beneficence and liberality was not a religious duty,
 He built upon now foundations for the sake of God.
 That a liberal man shall not get the reply : —
 ' Works are nothing but ashes.'
 The people of the period grieve for the Mullā.
 Seven hundred and seventy-one" [same as at the end of No. 10.]

No. 12. Tomb of Hājji Yūsuf, Cambay :—

Translation.

"Then cultivate her passion and beware of neglect, because lust is not discarded with muteness and becomes dumb. And regard her whilst she is pleased with practical demonstrations, and if she desires to love the gurgler, she will not poison. How many a pleasure which was delightful to a man is lethal because he does not know it! the poison in the medicine is the worst of treacheries in hunger and in reptition, and often wretchedness results from the evil of potations, because the flow of tears from an eye already saturated with fat and with music is a prohibition to restraint. Accordingly resist concupiscence and Satan and disobey them, and they call for advice therefore ponder. Obey neither their suggestions nor their behests for thou knowest the fraud of altercations and judg ments. I ask pardon from Allāh ! Words without deeds are attributed to a progeny which is followed by consequences blamed at last. The fruit however which thou hast desired to cherish, perished and is dead. But are not my words to thee :—Endeavour to cherish thy neck, and not love death voluntarily. I allude only to matters established by command [Fard] and do not discard those sanctioned by usage [Sunnat] which has been transgressed. Who revives transgressions so that over his ancestors have suffered indignity ; who repents but nevertheless dallies, his entrails are raked with pain, and he is buried under stones like a luxurious man who has abused his wealth unto his own destruction !”

2. On the same large tomb :—

Translation.

“ My writing is an admonition and something like daylight upon the face...[some imperfect words. And what youth is there who makes love to women, unless with some intentions of lust which pass my excuse ; and when the shedding of tears although not given up, clears away, the doubt of my case has ceased. My secret is not hidden from slanderers, nor is it my custom to shirk the trouble of advice, and to conclude it, but the lover pays no attention to it. The nobility of justice is in the mind which has meditated on advice...[again several imperfect sentences]. I would have concealed with concealment a secret which appeared to me from him. I have a mettle which I subdued Who restrains once, is restrained like the mettle of horses by bridling. Do not therefore augment her abundant lust by reins. Verily food strengthens sexual heat, and concupiscence is like an infant whom youthfulness impels to the love of sucking, but if thou weanest him he is weaned.”

3. On the central grave-stone in the same tomb is a legend consisting of two lines :—

1st, the Kalimah with the Bismillāh prefixed.

2nd, “ In the name of Allāh and by Allāh, and with the religion of the messenger of Allāh.”

4. On the grave-stone east of the central one in the large tomb at Sôjālî is another exactly the same as the preceding, which, however, I here give in Arabic :—

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم لا اله الا الله محمد رسول الله بسم الله وبالله وعلي ملا رسول الله

4. INSCRIPTIONS FROM DHOLKĀ AND BROACH.

Of ten of the inscriptions from Dholkā it is not worth while to give separate descriptions, as they contain only the profession of faith; each is inscribed within a kind of pointed arch resembling the top pieces of tomb-stones under which verses of the Qur'ān occur and the epitaphs; under these Dholkā ones, however, there is nothing. All are more or less ornamental, and only one of them exceeds two feet in length, being more than five long, and contains, besides the central arch with the profession of faith, two lateral compartments with the word Allāh in large characters. All these are from the mosque of Qadhi Balol Khān at Dholkā.

The six long-slips marked K, M, N, O, P and Q, copied by hand from an inscription painted upon board panelling, now much obliterated, run round the inner walls of the mosque, beginning from the south end of the west or back wall:

K, at the south end of the west wall, ends with the words "Who is he that can intercede with him?" of sūrah II. v. 256 of the Qur'ān; a few words of the beginning of this verso are wanting. The remaining portion of the verse was no doubt on L, which is over the mehrab.

M, on the north end of the back wall, contains the beginning of sūrah I, but the latter part of the slip is now blank.

N, on the west end of the north wall, bears the latter part of sūrah II. v. 231, and the remaining part is filled in with a benediction upon Muḥammad.

O, on the central portion of the north wall, is almost totally blank; and the few letters at the beginning and end of the slip do not allow of identification with any verso from the Qur'ān.

P, on the east end of the north wall; on this are legible only a few letters at the end of the slip; the rest is now blank.

Q, on the north end of the east or front wall, still bears part of sūrah II. v. 283, which being towards the end of the sūrah, it may be presumed that the whole of it had been completed on some of the remaining panels, which could not be copied because the letters have disappeared, or nearly so.

1. From a stone built into a brick supporting wall in Qadhi Balol Khān's Masjid at Dholkā:—

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم قال الله تعالى ان المساجد لله فلا تدعوا مع الله احدا عمارت

"In the name of Allāh, the merciful, the element. Allāh, who be exalted, has said [in the Qur'ān LXXII. 18] :—'Verily the mosques belong to Allāh, therefore do ye not invoke any one with Allāh.' The edifice of this mosque was—during the reign of his majesty the Sultān Abul-mujāhid Muḥammad, son of Toghlughshāh and during the period of Malek-ul-mulūk-ushsharq Rokn-uddaulat-vuddyn-fattāh Sirdār [or Servor] yekdilkhās—constructed by Mofakhr-ulomrā muqarrab-uddanlat-vuddyn Ilillāl Mollāy [or Malekī] the architect being the slave A'bd-ulkarim Latif. Dated the twenty-seventh of the month Dilhejjah, in the year seven hundred and thirty-three" [8th September 1333.]

The following three inscriptions are from the Tanka Masjid at Dholkā, and bear the same date in the reign of Firuz Shāh III, the 20th Sultān of the Pathān dynasty of Hindustān, whose name occurs also on each of them. The name of the individual at whose expense this mosque was constructed is also mentioned in each of the inscriptions and was Mufarrrah [exhilarator], who is also called by the title of Mufākhr-ul-khovās [the boast of, or the chief of favourite courtiers] and Mufarrrah Sultāni. The first and second inscriptions are in Persian rhymes, and the third in Arabic prose.

Mufarrrah-Mufakhr ul-khovās khās-ulkhās Sultāni
Built the pure Jāmi' mosque in Dholqab.

Of his own special private property by the divine favour of Allāh.

Upon amber bricks there are roses from musk of Tartary i. e., yellow tessellated pavement with black ornaments]

The mortar is of pure camphor [snowy whiteness], Bravo to the fortunate builder!

The meadow [surface] is like paradise, and men walk thereon.

The five stated prayers are performed there by Masu'd Tāyi [exemplar of liberality].

The glorious date at its [the mosque's] completion of hard marble was

Of the Hijrah seven hundred and sixty-two [Began 11th Nov. 1360] by divine grace.

Benediction be upon this building of his, till the day of resurrection,
May all difficulties be repelled and general prosperity ensue "

"In the name of Allāh, the merciful, the element!" [Qurān 111, 16, and part 17]:
"Allāh hath borne witness that there is no God but he; and the angels and those who are endowed with knowledgo [profess the same]; who executeth righteousness; there is no God but he; the mighty, the wise. Verily the religion in the sight of Allāh is Islām.' The object of adoration is Allāh, wherefore keep it. The prophet of Allāh has said:—'And' mercifulness is the peace of Allāh, and paradise, and the approbation of Allāh' This noble Jāmi mosque was built in the reign of the most great Sultān and the honoured Qaharmān; shadow of Allāh upon earth, vivifier of the Sonnah and the Fard confider in the aid of the merciful [Allāh]; Firuz Shāh the Sultān, may Allāh perpetuate his kingdom, and eternalizo his monarchy, from the special property of his majesty the king, lord of the sword and of the pen, protector of [divine] knowledge and [of secular] knowledge, by Mufakhr-ulkhovās Akhyār-uddaulat-waddyn [paragon of the chief civil and religious dignitaries] Mufarreḥ-ussultāni, may his special dignity be permanent, and may the shadow of the [royal] portals be extended towards him. And this was on the tenth of Rabi' II, in the year seven hundred and sixty-two" [17th Feb. 1361.]

This is only LXXII. 18 from the Qurān, which is quoted many times in these inscriptions.

6. Over the central mehrab, Jāmi mosque, Branch [304]:—

This inscription contains no date, but from the form and condition of the letters it can hardly be regarded as very old.

"Salutation to Sarvajña.² May Nemyjina..... whose ..... protect....."

"In the auspicious year 1288³ of Vikrama, Wednesday the 10th, of the bright half of Phalguṇa.

"Thakur Chandapa, an inhabitant of Anahilapura and of the Prāgrāta family, begat Chandaprasāda, who begat Soma, whose son was Āśārāja—his son, by Kumāradevi, was the great minister Vastupāla, younger brother of Luniga and Māladeva and elder brother of Tejapāla,—his son was Jayatasimha, who was born like a royal goose in the lake-like womb of Lalitādevi. Before the Samvat year 79 Jayatasimha was trading as a banker in Stambhatirtha; larors of new temples were caused to be built and many old ones repaired at great and renowned places of pilgrimage, such as Śatruñjaya, Arbudāchala, &c., in the prosperous cities of Anahilapura, Bhṛugupura, Stambhavalapura, Stambhatirtha, Darbhavanti, Dhavalakkaka and other places, by the great minister Vastupāla and by his younger brother Tejapāla. In the year Sam. 77—Vastupāla, who had obtained the leadership of a pilgrim-party by the favour of the lord of gods, manifested in virtue of the solemnities at such holy places as Śatruñjaya, Ujjayanta, &c., who had obtained authority in the kingdom by the favour of Viradhavala Mahārāja, son of Mahārājādhirāja Lavana-prasāda, who was shining like the Sun in the heaven of the Chaulūkyā family and was blessed by the favour of Śārādā (Sarasvatī) with a son, and his younger brother Tejapāla was carrying on banking transactions with the cities of Gujārāt of which Dhavalakkaka was the chief, in the year Sam. 76.

"Similarly the famous Vastupāla has caused to be built this new and splendid temple of the Mahātirthāvatāra with a mandapa adorned by twenty Tirthankaras such as Ajitanātha, which were religiously inaugurated by his holiness Vyajasenaśūri the ornament of the sacred seat of Bhūttāraka Haribhadraśūri who occupied the office of Amaraśūri, and by Ānandasūri a pupil of Śāntasūri, who again was a pupil and son of Bhūttāraka Mahendrasūri, of the Nāgendra division,—for the augmentation of his own merit and that of his wife Lahtādevī, the daughter of Kāhnada by Rānū of the Prāgvāta family. On this great holy place, the famous Ujjayanta adorned by Neminātha the lord of the gods, and graced by various traditionally recounted places of pilgrimage,—the famous Ashtāpada, a pillar called Sukhodghātannka containing the images of the happy Sonā his grandfather, and of the venerable Āśārāja his father—both mounted on horses—of the famous Neminātha with three decorated arches, and of his ancestors, elder brother, younger brother, sons, &c; the gods graced by the worshipful Neminātha on four summits known as Amhā, Avalokanā, Sāmba and Pradyumna, two Jinas and the four gods, viz. the famous Rishabhadeva the first Tirthankara, who was incarnate on the great holy place of Śatruñjaya, the famous god Pārśvanatha, who appeared in the flesh at Stambhanakapura, the famous Mahāvīradeva, who established himself as a deity at Satyapura, and the famous image of Sarasvatī, who was incarnate in Kāśmīra, with a eulogistic inscription,—were established and all set up by him (Vastupāla)”

(Śloka) “There is this difference between a flood of nectar and Vastupāla, the best of ministers,—the first restores the dead, the other restores the dying on the earth

“Let (Kubera) the giver of riches (Vishnu) the dear lord of Lakshmi, and Śiva the supreme ruler, be where they may—for though able, they do not satisfy the poor with treasures of enjoyment, while the famous Vastupāla every day sprinkles the earth, withered by the fire of poverty, like a fresh rain cloud with golden riches. O brother, what is the use of talking about sinful and wicked ministers who have nothing in their mind but make against the people? Sing then by hundreds the virtues of Vastupāla, who observes a vow of universal good as Kūrma did in times of yore. After Bhojarāja ascending above the sun was gone and Muñja became sole lord of the dominion in heaven, there now stands only the famous Vastupāla to wipe off the trickling tears of the needy

“O chief minister of the Chakrākya line, the sound of thy glory is heard with hours visibly on end and tears of joy even in the three worlds—for though polluted by Kṛti the earth has been sanctified by thee with temples, wells, charitable places to give water to the thirsty, ponds, gardens, lakes, &c

“May the celebrated minister Tojhpāla long be glorious—Tejhpāl by whom we pass our happy days free from anxieties as by a Chintāmani gem

“May this man, who is like a tree of paradise and a father to Lavanāsūbha, and in charge of the state seals of the son of Lavanaprasāda, enjoy the ministership for a hundred ages

“In olden times Bali was pressed down by the foot of Vishnu, the enemy of the demons, from the earth, now the same is done by the hand of Vastupāla

“His wife Lahtādevī had, by this best of ministers, a son named Jayantasūbha, possessed of modest virtues as Sachī, the daughter of Paloma, had Jayanta by Indra.

“These (ślokas) are (the composition) of the Thākur Somānandadeva the priest of the kṛn, of Gurjara “Jaitrasūbha surnamed Dīruva of good intelligence, son of Vājada and born in a Kāyastha family in Stambhānatha has written the eulogistic inscription

"This inscription has been carefully engraved by the ingenious Kumārasmha, the son of Vāhada, a mason by profession.

"May this inscription by the favour of Ambā and Nemi, the support of the three worlds, be fraught with blessing to the descent of Vastupāla"

INSCRIPTION No 2.

This is on the west door of Vastupāla and Tejapāla's temples It is in 14 long lines. The first part is rather obliterated. The prose-text is the same as in the preceding with very slight modifications, but the *shloka*s are new.

"How can this man be described by me?—a man whom his relations look upon as the moon, the needy as the object accomplished, and enemies as the deity of destruction."

"He is a minister by whom the natural enmities between wealth and learning superiority and subordination and pride and humility, have been laid at rest

"With what or whom can we compare the famous minister Vastupála? For if (we compare him) with a lamp it continually sucks up oil (affection) and brings forth a sooty dirt, if (we compare him to) the moon it is always inclined to the diminution of his disk (circle) and envies the rise of the sun (friend) when the sun with torch like rays does not bear the light of another luminous body

How many have not come in the course of this world like travellers making a temporary halt, how many do not go away, and how many will yet not go? But Vastupála, the ocean of admirable genius destroys all rogues, and keeping the treasures of merit in his hands, nourishes the earth

"Salutation to Sarvajña May that son of Śiva whose whole body is red by the groups of tender rays proceeding from the bright gems in the chaplets of prostrated gods and who looks red like saffron (?) as if washed by the bathing water poured by the hand of the lord of gods—May that son of the god protect the worlds from calamity !

"In the auspicious year of Vikrama 1288, Wednesday the 10th of the bright half of Phālguna.

"Thakur Chandapa, an inhabitant of Anahilapura and of the Prāgyāta family, begat Cbindraprasada, who begat Souma whose son was Aśvīya—his son by Kumāradevi was the great minister Vastupāla, the younger brother of Luniya and Vāhadeva and elder brother of Tejapāla—his son was Jayatasūma who was born like a royal goose in the lake like womb of Lalitidevi Before the Sarvit year 79 Jayatasūma was trading as a banker in Stambhātirtha Larvis of new temples were caused to be built and many old ones repaired at great and renowned places of pilgrimage such as Śātrunjaya Arbudīola, &c. and in the prosperous cities of Anahilapuri, Bhṛigupura Stambhanikapura Stambhātirtha, Dārḥavati, Dhavalakkaka and other places by the great minister Vastupāla and by his younger brother Tejapāla In the year Sarv 77—Vastupāla who had obtained the leadership of a pilgrim party by the favour of the lord of gods manifested in virtue of the solemnities at such holy places as Śātrunjaya, Ujjayanta, &c who had obtained authority in the kingdom by the favour of Virādīvala Mahārāja son of Mahārājadhīrāja Lavanaprasada, who was shining like the Sun in the heaven of the Chaulukya family and was blessed by the favour of Śārūḍi (Saravati) with a son, and his younger brother Tejapāla was carrying on banking transactions with the cities of Gujaraṭ of which Dhavalakkaka was the chief in the year Sarv 76

"Similarly the famous Vastupala has caused to be built this new and splendid temple of the Mahātīrthavatāra with a mandapa adorned by Tirthankaras such as Ajitanatha religiously inaugurated by his holiness Vijayasenāsūri the ornament of the sacred seat of Bhattaraka Hanubhadrasūri who occupied the office of Anarasūri and by Anandasūri a pupil of Śāntisūri who again was a pupil and son of Battāraka Mahendrasūri of the Nāgendra division—for the augmentation of his own merit and that of his wife Sokhukā, daughter of Kāhnadī by Ritu of the Prāgyāta caste On this great holy place the famous Ujjayanta adorned by Neminātha the lord of the gods and graced by various traditionally recounted places of pilgrimage such as the famous Aśtīpada—a pillar called Sukhodghātānaka containing the images of the happy Soma his grandfather, and of the venerable Aśvīya his father—both mounted on horses, himself (Vastupāla) and his younger brother (Tejapāla) being both mounted on the same elephant—of the famous Neminātha with three decorated arches, and of his ancestors elder brother younger brother, sons, &c , the quadruple gods graced by the worshipful Neminātha, on four summits (known as) Amba Avalokanā Sīmha and Pradīumana, two Jinas and the four gods viz. the famous

Rishabhādeva the first Tirthankara, who was incarnate on the great holy place of Śatruñjaya, the famous god Pāśvanātha, who appeared in flesh at Stanhkhurikpura, the famous Mahāvīradēva, who established himself as a deity at Satyapura, and the famous range of Sarasvatī, who was incarnate at Kāśmīra, with eulogistic inscription, —were established and all set up by him (Vastupāla)

(Ślohas) "May this Vastupāla, the sole place of safety, be prosperous and long-lived—he who has surpassed the minister of Indra by prudence and has fully adored the earth with palaces, whose foundations touched the very root of the earth and whose tops nodded in the sky, with lakes, and with white monasteries of Śvotāmbaras and with green gardens of pleasure

"O Vastupāla, Bali has sent thee a message that he has been much pleased by hearing from Nārada, who visits the three worlds, that though frequently solicited thou dost not extend thy anger to the needy, dost not give them sparingly, and attachest no importance to thy praise, that, in short, thou art not intoxicated by the pride of riches, and thou mayest long be happy.

"We think the lord of gods has come to the earth under the name of Vīra (dhavala) the destroyer of his enemy's enemies, and therefore the desire fulfilling tree of paradise, under the disguise of Vastupāla, and Brihaspati, the preceptor of the gods, under that of Tejapāla, dwell about him

"O minister of the king of the Chakulkyā line, thy glories, as if to ascertain whether there exists anywhere else a man who may be brave, generous and sweet speaking like thee, have gone in all directions seeking in every house and every town.

"Alas, three yugas have somewhere departed and the production of virtuous men has ceased, the time now prevails of Kali, when the erges are harassed, men do not perform good deeds and rogues are plying at large. Under these circumstances, O Vastupāla, Śiva has now heard that thy attention is solely directed to the removal of universal distress—do as it may please you "Who have not gone to the place of Yama depositing their treasures in the ground? But, O Vastupāla, thou delightest in giving them (treasures) to hungry people roaming here and there in all directions.

"O lord of the bear, hold the earth in thy tusk! O sun, illumine her! O clouds, sprinkle water upon her, and O Vastupāla, protect her with thy charitable gifts, for the Creator has assigned these duties to you

"O Vastupāla, images of Śiva visibly reside in thee, for thou art the soul of the world, thy glory is ever spreading (like the wind), thy face is lotus like (like the sky), thy friendship, O best of ministers! is firm (like the earth) thy fame is sweet (like water), thy patience is dark-destroying (like the sun), and who has not declared thy hand to be of nectarial power (like the moon) and thy body bright (like Agni)?

"Though the Vedic knowledge fires not well in any place, though no one takes a word of Smṛiti into his ears, though kings are misers and there is so much expense in the house, yet I feel not the least concerned for all that so long as Vastupāla lives

' That dost not listen to the word of the wicked, manifestest no anger and turnest not thy ambition to an improper object By this, O Vastupāla ' though living on earth, thou treadest Kāh underneath thy feet

' As a rule, offsprings follow their father, how then, O Vastupāla, can thy glory be doubtful, sprung though she is from thy all knowing self ?

' By the famous minister Vastupāla watering the earth with nectarial charities, the pride of Bāli and Kalpataru has been greatly lowered

" Among the elephant-like courtiers of the king, Vastupāla possesses the good qualities of a Bhadrā, for no intoxicated spirit ever comes out of him, though the profusion of gifts flows apace, just as a Bhadrā is not maddened though rutting secretion flows profuse

" Only one elephant was obtained from the ocean by many gods while O Vastupāla, many elephants from the ocean (i.e., countries on the seashore) by one wise man (i.e., yourself) Vastupāla, thou hast pleased thy master first with streams of wealth, then with horses, and now thou, who art the ocean of virtuous deeds, hast pleased him with numerous elephants

" Vastupāla, thou hast indeed measured the depth of the ocean, for having thence conveyed a number of elephants thou hast placed them at the gates of thy master.

" These (ślo/as) are by Thākur Someśvara priest to the king of Gujarāt

" Kāyastha Jayatasimha surnamed Dhruva inhabitant of Stambhapur, the son of Vājada, the son of Ataka who was the son of Sahajiga, the son of Valiga, ' &c, &c, &c

Translation

"Salutation to the holy Nemināthadeva May those gods of holy places who are jewels on the crests of the eighteen mountains whose feet are washed by streams of radiant light proceeding from hundreds of coronets on the heads of prostrating gods and whose images are unrivalled—May those gods of holy places give excellent and devouring riches to you

"In the auspicious year of Vikrama 1288, Wednesday the 10th of the bright half of Phālguna

"Thakur Chandapa an inhabitant of Agalhapura and an ornament of the Prāgya family, begat Chandaprasada who begat Soma whose son was Aśhṛtāja—his son is Kumāradevi was the great minister Vastupāla, the younger brother of Lunga and Māladeva and elder brother of Tejāpāla,—his son was Jayatasimha who was born like a royal goose in the lake like womb of Lalitadevi. Before the Samat year 79 Jayatasimha was trading as a banker in Staṁbhātirtha, Jarai, of new temples were caused to be built and many old ones repaired at great and renowned places of pilgrimage such as Śatruñjaya, Arbudaśhala, &c., and in the prosperous cities of Anahilapura Bhṛigupura, Stambhānapura, Stambhātirtha, Darbhavati Dhīrāḥkalā and other places by the great minister Vastupāla and by his younger brother Tejāpāla in the year Sam 77—Vastupāla who had obtained the leadership of a pilgrim party by the favour of the lord of gods, manifested in virtue of the solemnities at such holy places as Śatruñjaya, Ujṇyanta &c.—who had obtained authority in the kingdom by the favour of Virādharāla Mahārāja, son of Mahārājadhīrāja Lavanaprasīda who was shining like the sun in the heaven of the Chaulukya family, and was blessed by the favour of Śārada (Śūnasati) with a son, and his younger brother Tejāpāla was carrying on banking transactions with the cities of Gujarat of which Dhavalakka was the chief.

Similarly the famous Vastupāla has caused to be built this new and splendid temple of the Mahātīrtāvatāra with a mandapa adorned by twenty Tirthankaras such as Ajitanātha, religiously inaugurated by his holiness Vyāsaśāstri, the ornament of the sacred seat of Bhūtāraka Hariḥhadrasāri who occupied the office of Amarasūri, and by Anandasāri, a pupil of Śantisāri, who again was a pupil and son of Bhattaraka Mahendrasāri of the Nāgendra division. For the augmentation of his own merit and that of his wife Lalitadevi, the daughter of Kaulheda by Kānu of the Prāgavī caste—on this great holy place the famous (Ujṇyanta) adorned by Neminātha the lord of the gods and graced by various traditionally recounted places of pilgrimage such as the famous Aṣṭāpada,—a pillar called Sukhodghatanika containing the images of the happy Soma his grandfather, and of the venerable Aśarāja his father—both mounted on horses—of the famous Neminātha with three decorated arches and of his ancestors, elder brother younger brother, &c., the quadruple gods graced by the worshipful Neminātha on four summits (known as) Ananta, Avalokita, Samba and Pradyumna, two Jinās and three gods, and the famous Rishabhadevi, the first Tirthankara who was incarnate on the great holy place of Śatruñjaya the famous god Pārśvanātha who appeared in flesh at Staṁbhanakapura, the famous Mahāvīradara who established himself as a deity at Satyapura, and the famous image of Sarasvatī who was incarnate in Kāśmīra, were established with eulogistic inscription, all set up by himself (Vastupāla).

(Śloka) Let there be continuous salutation to holy Bah and Karmā, who a charity though unseen has been the object of so much fame, consequently the people are worthy of worship and the great minister Vastupāla's charity which the people see with their eyes so great that even the world itself can scarcely contain it.

Many learned men adorned with diadems bracelets rings frontal marks armlets garlands and silken robes presented by him (Vastupāla's) hands became so changed that they with great difficulty and many oaths could persuade their partners of their identity.

The son of Virochana in y extend (give) his gift of charity Bhāṣa, Vāṣa, &c. their riches of poetry Prithu Raghu &c., their vow of bravery and the instructor of the army of gods may lend his intelligence; but, Vastupāla, we know not from what source thou hast derived thy prideless manners.

"Who knows the extraordinary deeds of Vastupāla as they really are—Vastupāla whose dānas (presents and punishments) are unceasing equally upon his implorers and enemies?

"With what epithets of greatness should the great minister Vastupāla be praised, whose ways of giving alms, at once destroying the stamp of poverty, have strung together the words giver and needy in the whole world and made them useless!

"Thinking that he gave little to supplicants, who being satisfied by his first gift did not like to return, he stood calling after them with hands outstretched to give many times more than the first amount.

"Thinking that the world is soiled by the muddy vices of Kāli, and that tottering virtue would stumble at every step without a path to walk on, he the great minister, has made places of ebriety as a pavement for the old religion to walk on.

"What new variety do not the glories of Vastupāla assume! They have the splendour of geese on the lotus; the brightness of a heap of foam on the lake, and beauty of spotless pearls on the sea shore; they look like moonlight in night-blowing lotuses and spreading white as flowers in gardens attached to the house.

"Alas, O lord of heaven, a great misfortune! 'Woll, who are you?' (he says) 'a keeper of the garden of Paradise.' 'What is your affliction?' he asks; 'somebody has taken off the desire-fulfilling tree from the garden of your highness.' He replies; 'No, say not so; I have, out of special grace to men, sent it down to earth, which it now graces under the name of Vastupāla.'

"The whole river system being rendered white by the up-and-down waves of the great minister Vastupāla's glories, the pilgrims to the holy Ganges, mistaking every river for the real Ganges (whose water is white) wander here and there with minds very much perplexed and limbs exhausted and slackened with fatigue.

"Who is not fortunate when the minister Vastupāla is nigh? Vastupāla, whose face if once falling within the sight of stealing poverty, is a positive command for its departure, whose eyes if favourably cast are nectar showers to his friends, and whose kind conversation always turns upon the lucid and unrivalled discussion of the Supreme Being.

"His victorious younger brother, who never displays unholly anger in his eyes, and by whose shelter the virtuous at once get rid of their troubles, is known by the name of Tejapāla, and he looks like the embodiment of final bentitude to the virtuous on this earth.

"He is the attraction of riches, hindrance of misfortune, restraint of worldly desires, and the cause of sending glories to the utmost boundary of the points of the compass. He causes the exploits of his enemy to swoon away and is death to the thief, injustice. These six qualities are self-existent in this minister.

"These are by Narendrasāri Mladhāri," &c., &c.

"Salutation to Sarvajña. Those.....to the mount of Ujjayanta..... for the benefit of the people.

"In the auspicious year of Vikrama 1268, Wednesday the 10th of the bright half of Phalguna.

"Thakur Chandapa, an inhabitant of Anahilapura and of the Prāgrvāta family, begat Chandaprasāda, who begat Soma, whose son was Aśārāja—his son by Kumāradevi was the great minister Vastupāla, the younger brother of Luṇiga and Māladēva and elder brother of Tejāhpāla—his son was Jayatāsīmbha, who was born like a royal goose in the lake-like womb of Lalitādevī. Before the Saṃvat year 70, Jayatāsīmbha was trading as a banker in Stambhātīrtha, karors of new temples were caused to be built and many old ones repaired at great and renowned places of pilgrimage such as Sātrufajaya, Arbuddachala, &c., and in the prosperous cities of Anahilapura, Bhṛigupura, Stambhianakapura, Stambhātīrtha, Darbhāvati, Dhavalakkaka and other places by the great minister Vastupāla and by his younger brother Tejāhpāla. In the year Saṃvat 77—Vastupāla, who had obtained the leadership of a pilgrim-party by the favour of the lord of gods manifested in virtue of the solemnities at such holy places as Sātrufajaya, Ujjayanta, &c.—who had obtained authority in the kingdom by the favour of Viradhavala Mahārāja son of Mahārājādhīrāja Lavaṇaprasāda, who was shining like the sun in the heaven of the Chaulukya family, and was blessed by the favour of Śārādā (Sarasvatī) with a son, and his younger brother Tejāhpāla was carrying on banking transactions with the cities of Gujarat, of which Dhavalakkaka was the chief, in the year Saṃvat 76.

"Similarly the famous Vastupāla has caused to be built this new and splendid temple of the Mahātīrthavatāra with a maṇḍapa adorned by twenty Tīrthaakaras such as Ajitaātha, religiously inaugurated by his holiness Vijayasevasūri, ornamented of the sacred seat of Bhaṭṭāraka Haribhadrasūri, who occupied the office of Amarasūri, and by Anandasūri, a pupil of Santisūri, who again was a pupil of the Bhaṭṭāraka Mahendrasūri of the Nāgendra division. For the augmentation of his own merit and that of his wife Lalitādevī, the daughter of Kānhaḍa by Rāṇu of the Prāgrvāta caste—on this great holy place, the famous Ujjayanta adorned by Neminātha the lord of the gods, and graced by various traditionally recounted places of pilgrimage such as the famous Aśtāpadā, a pillar called Sukhodghātaka containing the images of Soma his grandfather, and of the ven-

able Âśvārjya his father—both mounted on horses—of the famous Neminātha with three decorated arches and of his ancestors, elder brother, younger brother, sons, &c., the quadruple gods, graced by the worshipful Neminātha on four summits (known as) Ambī, Avalokanī, Śimba and Pradyumnā, two Jinas and the four gods, viz. the famous Rishabhadeva, the first Tirthankara who was incarnate on the great holy place of Śātrañjaya, the famous god Parśvanātha who appeared in flesh at Stambhānālapura, the famous Māhāvīradeva who established himself as a deity at Satyapura, and the famous image of Sarasvatī who was incarnate in Kāśmīra, with eulogistic inscription—were established and all set up by him (Vastupāla).²

(Stō as.) "How can this Vastupāla, a leading member of the religion of the lord of Jina, be not an object of praise? He shines like a moving combination of learning, virtue, glory, prudence and a crowd of other qualities

"Though he is endowed with seven qualities,—nobility, valour, learning, wisdom, wealth, charity and judgment, all beginning with Vs, yet is influenced by no passion

"My Vastupāla, this son, live for ever, created for the discharge of charitable duties, is not only the earth but even ships and oceans.

"We see in Vastupāla both the enjoyment of poetry and also other joys and happiness

"The tree of paradise grew on the celestial mountain which is inaccessible, the cow of heaven fled out of sight, and the desire fulfilling gem hid itself in the ocean, who else then can compete with Vastupāla's charity and solely call himself meritorious? If none, why should not Vastupāla be called the only unrivalled distributor of charities?

"How cannot this great moister Vastupāla, bearing as he does so much weight of religious duties, be like a blade of grass (or master of politics) when he has Tejapāla, white as . . . and possessed of intelligence to understand all things, to put himself to the administrative yoke as a partner" (literally, as a second bull).

"While Vastupāla, the bearer of ambrosial water and supporter of the people, is day and night raining with various silver plenties which are the results of his excellent good qualities, pure as moonlight cleared of clouds, the people are living through his protection

"Vastupāla is fully convinced within himself that riches are restless because they had connection with the turning of the churning mountain, the love of women with eyes active like the gazelle is inconstant because it depends upon the amorous play of eyebrows, and that life is uncertain because it consists of the breath—and that therefore duty alone is firm

"Who can well describe the proper form of Tejapāla and Vihnu, who protect the three worlds on their shoulder?"

² This is a play on the word Vidvān — J W W

"The wife of Vastupāla was by name Lalitādevī, who gave birth to a son named Jayatasimha, who was not wanting in justice.

"Jaitrasimha placed his youth immovable, between his body and evil passions.

"This is the composition of Sarachandrasōri Maladhāri.

"Jaitrasimha, surnamed Dhruva, is the copyist, and Kumārasimha the engraver," &c. &c.

"Salutation to Sarvajna. May those Tirthankaras be always the cause of manifold blessings to you—the Tirthankaras who are the jewels on the crown like summit of Sîmeta mountain, whose glories are exalted by having humbled the pride of smiling Cupid, whose brilliant splendour is like that of the Fort of Sivapara and who are mines of many excellent gems such as the knowledge connected with eternity.

"In the auspicious year of Vikrama 1288 Wednesday, the 10th of the bright half of Phalguna

'Thakur Chandapa, an inhabitant of Anahilapura and of the Prigvita family, begot Chandapraida who begot Somra whose son was Anantya,—his son by Kumradevi was the great minister Vastupala the younger brother of Lunge and Mhadeva and elder brother of Tejapala,—his son was Jyotismukha, who was born like a royal goose in the lake like womb of Lalitidevi. Before the Samvat year 79 Javatasimha was trading as a banker in Stambhatirtha, karors of new temples were caused to be built and many old ones repaired at great and renowned places of pilgrimage such as Satrudhyaya, Arundichala &c., and in the prosperous cities of Anahilapura Dhurgapura Stambhankapura Stambhatirtha, Darbhavati Dhavalakshala and other places by the great minister Vastupala and by his younger brother Tejapala. In the year Sam 77, Vastupala who had obtained the leadership of a pilgrim party by the favor of the lord of gods manifested in virtue of the solemnities at such holy places as Satrudhyaya, Ujjayanta, &c. who had obtained authority in the king to a by the favor of Mahabala Miltraya, son of Mahirajpaliraja Lavanspradip who was shining like the sun in the heaven of the Chaulukya family and was blessed by the favor of Sarala (Saraswati) with a son and his young brother Tejahpāla was carrying on banking transactions with the cities of Gujarāt, of which Dhavalakkaka was the chief in the year Sam. 76.

"Similarly the famous Vastupāla has caused to be built this new and splendid temple of the Mahātirthāvatāra with a mandapa adorned by twenty Tirthaṅkaras such as Ajitanātha, religiously inaugurated by his holiness Vijayasenāsāri, the ornament of the sacred seat of Bhaṭṭārako Haribhadrasāri, who occupied the office of Amarasāri, and by Ānandasāri a pupil of Śāntisāri, who again was a pupil and son of Bhṭṭāraka Maheodrasāri of the Nāgeodra division. For the augmentation of his own merit and that of his wife Lalitadevi, the daughter of Kānhaḍa by Rāma of Prāgrāṣa family—on this great holy place, the famous Ujjayaṇta adored by Neminātha the lord of the gods and graced by various traditionally recounted places of pilgrimage such as the famous Aṣṭāpada, a pillar called Sukhodghāṭmaka containing the images of the happy Soma his grandfather, and of the venerable Āśvārāja his father—both mounted on horses—of the famous Neminātha with three decorated arches, and of his ancestors, older brother, younger brother, sons, &c.; the quadruplo gods graced by the worshipful Nominātha on four summits known as Ambā, Avolokanā, Sāmba and Pradyumna; two Jīnas and the four gods, viz. the famous Rishabhadeva the first Tirthaṅkara who was incarnate on the great holy place of Śātruhjaya, the famous god Pārśvanātha who appeared in the flesh at Stambhacakrapura, the famous Mohāviraḍeva who established himself as a deity at Satyapura, and the famous image of Sarosvotī who was incarnate in Kāśmīra, with a eulagistic inscription,—were established and all set up by him (Vastupāla)."

(*Śloka*s.) "O Vastupāla, the crown of the highly religious circle, whence does thy flood of glory portend of unholy character, for it deprives Brāhmins of money and the moon of its light and surpasses the father of Pārvaṭī (or stretches far beyond the Himālayas); it extorts no fear of heaven (fears no enemy or rival); it takes delight in despising the hermits (considers to have achieved its object in surpassing the gods)."

"Near the illustrious city of Stambhacakra the ocean had been dried up by the enemies making a good display of their wrath, with dust raised by their war-horses in the army from the trodden earth. But the same was again filled up by the river flowing water of perspiration from their bodies, which were heated by the burning rays of Vastupāla's prowess.

"How should not Vastupāla, the son of Aśvārāja, be empty deserving of praise? For with his brother of equal ability shining on the right side and himself on the left, he bears on his shoulder as easily as in sport the heavy load of the administration chariot entrusted to him by King Virādhavala, who is brave in making a triumphal march in all directions.

"His (elder) brother, having a face shining like the dark-destroying moon at night, was from the spread of his radiance called Luniga in the proper sense of the word (of lovely body—lāvanyānga) and I suspect he has been (bodily) carried off by celestial damsels simply because they thought the god Cupid had been made incorporeal by the anger of Śiva, while this man was Cupid incarnate.

"His second brother Malladeva shines like a royal goose in this world, for he is attached to virtuous deeds as the bird is red in feet with a graceful gait; he has attained great reputation by being a leader of those devoted to Brahmā as the bird has by being a vehicle of the same deity, he takes delight in pure minds as the bird does in the pellucid lake of Manasa without taking muddy ways and he has two sides (maternal and paternal) unsullied as the bird has two white wings

"The famous Vastupāla is virtuous, devoted to poetry of nectarial essence, and is sweet in giving instruction by his firm understanding. The heaven resembles a bee in the lotus cup of his knowledge, and is like a deer in the moon of his fame, and looks like Vishnu in the ocean of his greatness

"In the milky ocean of his glory the moon is a drop of water, the celestial river, a lump of foam, the lord of light is a spray of corn, and Vishnu is the sky (enveloping the ocean). Kailāsa, heavenly elephant, Siva, and the snowy mountains are the pearls, and the moonlight is its crystal sands

"There shines Tejapāla, who is richly gifted in possessing a taste for knowledge (f), who fills all the domains of Dakṣiṇī with abundant wealth, and whose genius may well compare with that of the lord of Lopamudrī who had been the cause of giving free course to the sun by stopping the huge increase of the Vindhya mountains infested with elephants, as it (genus) is a hindrance to the prosperity of his hostile king possessing many elephants

"There are on earth the meritorious Puṇyasūmba the son of Malladeva, Jaitrasūmba of best rewarded the son of Vastupāla and Lāvāṇyasūmba the son of Tejapāla. These three make up as it were the four feet of merit, which is one-footed in Kālī

"These are by the famous Udayaprabhāsūrī Bhattachāraka of the Nāgēodra division

INSCRIPTION NO 7

This is on a wall near the first entrance door of Neminātha's temple on the left side of the main road and a little way off from the fort gate. The inscription is incomplete on the stone and the first parts of the first six lines are broken away. The characters are large and distinct, but the writing is very incorrect mango fruits, and has a lap graced by a son, as if to fulfil the wishes of men for a hundred sons.

"5. May the gods Gûru, Meghaûda, Indra, &c., give their desired proximity to those who busily engage themselves in the faithful performance of religious deeds on the great mountain-king Ujjayanta now-a-days.

"6. This country of Saurishta, the best of lands, though perpetually adorned with various tirthas, gardens, rivers, forests and charming palaces and with countless citizens enjoying manifold comforts extended by kings, possesses an unrivalled ornament in the mountain-king Rairata.

"7. O mountain of the immortals, be not proud; for how many like the sun, moon, &c., have not been set wheeling round thee notwithstanding they bear thee infatigable love? Let therefore Rairata alone be praised, by whose very sight living beings become free from delusion and enjoy great happiness and pleasures.

"8. Furthermore on this mountain the family of Hari may be compared with bamboos; for the family had a great abode on this mountain as the bamboos have many stalks bending down; the family had celebrated Parvas as the bamboos have great knots. The great members of the Yâdava family Śivâṅgaya, Achyuta, Bala, &c., though themselves pearls among all saints, derive spotless beauty from this mountain.

"9. In the royal race of a king named Yadu, of terrible valour, there was a family which possessed many excellent qualities and was celebrated as the illustrious Yâdvas. There flourished, in the order of succession, the famous Mandallika who sat on the throne bowed down to by many kings, and who made a temple to Neminâtha with heavy plates of gold.

"10. His son was Hâja Navaghana, who wielded a new strong sword against his enemy, who, as a fresh cloud shower to his forest-like people, and who looked pleasing by his fame white as camphor.

"11. His son was Mahipâdava, a great king, before whose liberality the heavenly cow, the desired-fulfilling jewel, and the tree of Paradise were easily reduced to submission, and who caused a temple of Somanâtha to be built at Prabbâsa.

"12. Afterwards there flourished a king called Khangîra, a fire in the trees of his enemies, an ornament in the splendour of his royal family, and a stream of water to the creeper-like world.

"13. Then succeeded the handsome king Jayasinhadeva, whose eyes were wet with the fatigue caused by the pleasure of the enjoyment of his crown land, which was as it were a beautiful woman; who was a moon of the ocean of justice, and the fear of his enemies; whose greatness was exalted by solemn vows, and whose feet were washed by the water of the rays issuing from the diamonds of the crowns of those kings who bowed before him.

"14. After him shone Mokalsinoba like a lion to tear down the elephants of hostile kings. He was a royal goose in the mental-lake of the virtuous, and his light was borrowed by the sun in the sky.

"15. Next to him came the king Melagadeva, who satisfied the most worshipful lord of the gods by his virtuous deeds, and who resembled a bee in the lotus-foot of Bhavanātha and possessed an unsullied body.

"16. Then came the king Mahipāṇḍeva, who was like a sun to illuminate the dignity of his predecessor, a maker of prosperity and of extraordinary power by his excessive splendour. He overstepped the best of kings by imposing royal dues in all directions as the sun spreads his rays over mountain summits all about. He drove out the owls of hostile kings, and was prepared to destroy the darkness of immorality.

"17. The son of the above-named was the famous Maṇḍalikā, who was like the lion in creating fear among his elephant-like enemies, and whose splendour was like that of a diamond in the crown of the best of monarchs, and whose glory, comparable to the waves of a heavenly river uninterruptedly flowing and ready to go beyond the sea, is yet spreading in all directions.¹

"18. The son of king Maṇḍalikā desirous of gathering good renown, is over victorious—arm which is a post to the circle of which to tie a young beautiful elephant of victory, a bridge to cross over the ocean of miseries and a banner on the house of bravery; it is a handle to churn the curd of the battle-field; an eastern mount to shoot the rays of the sword-like sun, and a cause of wholesale widowhood to the wives of his hostile kings.

"19. O enemies, out of compassion I will make you to hear a word of benefit. It is this—at once making yourself free from pride, seek the service of Maṇḍalikā, the king of men; for the tread of his horse's hoof raises so large quantity of fine dust, which at once concealing, the sun obscures the face of the earth. Of what importance then are you before him?

"20. There is wisdom of Brahmā in making the heavenly cow a senseless beast, the celestial gem a shining stone, and the tree of Paradise a lump of wood, from their very birth; for had they been made with the sensibilities of life, what would have been the state of their hearts troubled with shame at your liberality, O Maṇḍalikā!

¹ Śloka 18 is made out by Vallabhajī Āchārya to be a kind of acrostic, the last reply Śrīrājdjīśrītaḥ containing the answer to the acrostic. The first reply is Śrītaḥ, or the 1st and last syllables, the second is Rātaḥ, or the 2nd syllable and the final syllable: the third is Ajataḥ; the fourth, Rātaḥ, the fifth, Jataḥ, the sixth, Śrītaḥ; and the seventh, the entire answer Śrīrājdjīśrītaḥ. The śloka is as follows—

- | | |
|--|---|
| 18. Why can he not be surpassed? | On account of his beauty (Śrītaḥ) |
| In what does his greatness consist? | In his wealth (Rātaḥ). |
| By whom was the universe created? | By Brahmā (Ajataḥ) |
| What do two vainglorious persons do with their riches? | They bestow gifts (Rātaḥ). |
| What did Maṇḍalikā do to his enemies? | He conquered (them) (Jataḥ) |
| What did the enemy to the lord of Śivaśāstra, in order to enjoy peace? | They did him service (Śrītaḥ) |
| What sort of a Rājā is Rājā Maṇḍalikā? | He is a Rājā served by many Rājās (Śrīrājdjīśrītaḥ) |

"Thus ends the description of the family of the king

"Now begins the description of the famous Sâna

' He was a depository of welfare, an abode of unlimited affection of wealth, a treasure of religion, and a shining ornament on the crest jewel of the earth, his best wife, and builder of wells, ponds, lakes, gardens, Jaina temples and Saiva temples '

Translation.

"Salutation to Vinayaka, he, who, being solely won by devotion, is not accessible to the best of sages, hermits or gods with all their contemplations, sacrifices and charities—may he protect the world !

"There was a king named Maudalika in the family of the Yadavas, who conquered the Mudgala (Moghal) and was soried by many friendly kings with rich tributes. His son was Malipala. His son Khargara, the nourisher of the world, was a great supporter of musical science. He conquered twice nine islands (continents) and established a great idol of Somnathra. His son was Jayatasimha deva, who satisfied the Brahmins with land, gold and other gifts. After him came the king Muktasimha, who properly controlled the rules of social divisions and acted by exploits like a lion let loose upon his elephant enemies.

"The son of the above was Mandalika, who was a holy place for the purification of wine drinking Yadavas, who looked upon the wives of others as his mother and who was a warlike soldier in the battle field.

"His younger brother Moliga was of large intelligence. His son was Jayasimha whose vows consisted of the pledges of security to the terrified. At one time in his reign, which protected many members of the Yadava family, a large army of the Yavanas came to the frontier of Jijharakata. This he defeated and spared the remainder according to the rules of justice and Dāmodara, the son of the famous Piti Narasimhadava who daily performed six ceremonies of the six Krishnas, constructed this unbroken mansion for the good of the pilgrims and hermits to save his own ancestors. Friday the 5th of Chaitra Sudi Sava Rāna (3) Turanga (7), Sāgara (4), Mabi (1) (i.e. 1173).

Sāmala the son of Mantrisimha, who was the son of Dhāndhala, a Brahman in the Nagara division, has composed this inscription, Karanaka, the son of Jhāla a mason, has cut this inscription in the year 1473.
